Ni'tid. adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Bright, ſhining, luſtrous.

We reſtore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

Ni'tre. n. ſ. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Latin.]

The ſalt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or ſalt-petre, is a cryſtalline petrified, but ſomewhat watriſh ſubſtance, of an acrid and bitteriſh taſte, impreſſing a peculiar ſenſe of coldneſs upon the tongue. This ſalt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid ſpirit capable of diſſolving almoſt every thing, yet manifeſts no ſign of its containing any acid at all in its crude ſtate. Nitre is of the number of thoſe ſalts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, ſtones, and other foſſile ſubſtances, as the particles of metals are in their ores. It is ſometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the ſurface of old walls, theſe efflorescences diſſolved in proper water, ſhooting into regular and proper cryſtals of nitre. That this ſalt ſhould be found on the ſurface of walls is not wonderful, ſince it is found only on or near the ſurface of the earth where it is produced. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Perſia and the Eaſt-Indies, is a kind of yellowiſh marl found in the bare cliffs of the ſides of hills expoſed to the northern and eaſtern winds, and never in any other ſituation. From this marl the ſalt is ſeparated by water; but the cryſtals into which it ſhoots, as we receive them from the Eaſt-Indies, are ſmall, imperfect, and impure. Earths of whatever kind, moiſtened by the dung and excrement of animals, frequently afford nitre in large quantities. The earths at the bottom of pigeon-houſes, and thoſe of ſtables and cow-houſes, all afford nitre, on being thrown into water and boiled. In France, where very little nitre is imported, they make it from the rubbiſh of old mortar and plaſter of buildings; and the mortar of old walls with us, if moiſtened with urine and expoſed to the air in a proper ſituation that is open to the north eaſt, and covered over to defend it from wet, never fails to afford nitre in a few weeks, and that in proportion of one tenth of the weight of the ingredients. There is no queſtion but a manufactory of nitre might be eſtabliſhed in England to as much advantage as that of France. The place where the materials are expoſed, is to be carefully examined. It muſt be moderate as to the great points of moiſture and dryneſs; if there be too much moiſture the nitre which is already formed will be waſhed away, and without ſome moiſture the ſalts will hardly be ever formed. Heat and coldneſs, unleſs exceſſive, can be of no conſequence. It is on account of the requiſiteneſs of ſo certain a degree of moiſture to the materials from which nitre is obtained, that the north eaſt winds are of ſo much uſe in the production of it. In ſpring and autumn, which are the ſeaſons when this ſalt is principally made, theſe two winds are neither too moiſt nor too dry, eſpecially in the night; the ſouth and weſt winds are deſtructive, becauſe they bring ſtorms and ſhowers. In medicine, nitre is cooling and diuretick, and good in burning fevers. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure ſalt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native ſalts, being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of thoſe made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular cryſtalization, which thoſe ſalts are not. It is found on or very near the ſurface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, ſpungy, light, and friable, and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. It is of an acrid taſte, like pot-aſhes. About Smyrna and Epheſus, and through a great part of Aſia Minor, this ſalt is extremely frequent on the ſurface of the earth, and alſo in Sindy, a province of the inner Aſia, where they ſweep it up and call it ſoap-earth, uſing a ſolution or lye of it in waſhing. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, has been by ſome ſuppoſed to be a foſſil ſubſtance, and by others to be the ſame with our nitre or ſalt-petre, but both theſe opinions are erroneous, this ſalt being the true natrum of the ancients, anſwering perfectly to its deſcription, and having all its uſes and virtues. In ſcripture we find that the ſalt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abſterſive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this ſalt but not with ſalt-petre, as do many current qualities aſcribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Foſſ.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Inſtinct with fire and nitre, hurried him Milton.

Some ſteep their ſeed, and ſome in caudrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

Ni'trous. adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre, conſiſting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the ſun, gather a nitrous faineſs more than either of them have ſeverally. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The northern air being more fully charged with thoſe particles ſuppoſed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is beſt to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is ſufficient to move ſuch an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought ſo much inclin'd,
May ſnowy fields and nitrous paſtures find,
Meet ſtores of cold ſo greedily purſue,
And be refreſh'd with never-waſting food. Blackmore

NI'TROUS. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Water my theme confines, whoſe nitrous wind
Shall cruſt the flabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay

NI'TTILY. adv. [from nitty.] Loufily.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new bellman, he was a man nittily needy, and therefore adventurous. Hayward

NI'TTY. adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and ſeparated from that and from its inveſtient coat, the mace before it is ſent over to us; except that the whole fruit is ſometimes ſent over in preſerve, by way of ſweet-meat or as a curioſity. The nutmeg is of a roundiſh or oval figure, of a compact or firm texture, and its ſurface furrowed: it is of an extremely agreeable ſmell and an aromatick taſte. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male which is long and cylindrical, but it has leſs of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the ſhape of an olive. The Dutch import the nutmegs and mace from the Eaſt-Indies, and ſupply all Europe with them. The tree which produces them is not unlike our pear-tree in its manner of growth its leaves, whether green or dried, have, when bruiſed, a very fragrant ſmell, and the trunk or branches, cut or broken off, yield a red liquor like blood. This tree is carefully cultivated. But that which produces the male nutmeg grows wild in the mountainous parts of the Moluccas. Nutmeg is much uſed in our foods, and is of excellent virtues as a medicine. Hill.

The ſecond a dry and floſculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth a kernel included in the ſhell, which lieth under the mace, is the ſame we call nutmeg. Brown's V. Err.

I to my pleaſant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant ſcent. Sandys.

NU'TSHELL. n. ſ. [nut and ſhell.] The hard ſubſtance that incloſes the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutſhell, and count myſelf a king of infinite ſpace. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

A fox had me by the back, and a thouſand pound to a nutſhell, I had never got off again. L'Eſtrange.

It ſeems as eaſy to me, to have the idea of ſpace empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutſhell without a kernel. Locke.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the ſeams of the ſhips, of old ſeer and weather beaten ropes, when they are over ſpent and grown ſo rotten as they ſerve for no other uſe but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and waſhes away with every ſea as the ſhips labour and are toſſed. Ral.

Some drive old oakum thro' each ſeam and rift;
Their left hand does the caulking iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. ſ. [ape, Saxon, perhaps by alluſion to the common expreſſion of plowing the water, from the ſame root with ear, to plow, aro, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which veſſels are driven in the water, the reſiſtance made by water to the oar puſhing on the veſſel

Th' oars were ſilver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept ſtroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faſter,
As amorous of their ſtrokes. Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſar

So tow'rds a ſhip the oar-finn'd galies ply,
Which wanting ſea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham's Poems.

In ſlipping ſuch as this, the Iriſh kern
And untaught Indian, on the ſtream did glide,
E'er ſharp-keel'd boats to ſtem the flood did learn,
Or ſix like oars did ſpread from either ſide. Dryden

3. Adverse argument.

There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after refuted. Bacon's War with Spain.

Whosoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. Fault found.

I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Waller's Letter.

OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself, and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts's Logick.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasuries of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale's Origin of Man.

OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that very same object of the mind. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.

2. In a state of opposition.

The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission which objectively move his sense. Brown's V.

OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.] The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that object fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections, one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made. Burton.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley's Serm.

OBIT. [a corruption of obit, or obiit.] Funeral obsequies. Ain.

To OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgo, Latin.] To chide, to reprove.

2. To nuobr, to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, muſt
Obſerve his honour with a boundleſs truſt. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour
Aſſume the right of man's deſpotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou miſled,
To think thy wit theſe goodlie notions bred!
Theſe truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind.
Reveal'd religion firſt inform'd thy ſight,
And reaſon ſaw not, till faith ſprung the light.
Thus man by his own ſtrength to heaven wou'd ſoar,
And wou'd not be oblig'd to God for more. Dryden.

When intereſt calls off all her ſneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd deſert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the ſcaffold or the cell. Pope.

To thoſe baths we are obliged for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniencies and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To pleaſe, to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by diſdaining him, as a man has a greater advantage by ſowing and dreſſing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South's Sermons

Some natures are ſo ſour and ſo ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Eſtrange.

Happy the people, who preſerve their honour
By the ſame duties that oblige their prince! Add. Cato.

The next morning there came to us the ſame officer that came to us at firſt to conduct us to the ſtranger's houſe. Bac.

If it ſhould fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the ſeveral officers of his court. Temple.

As a magiſtrate or great officer he locks himſelf up from all approaches. South's Sermons.

Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A ſuperior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Eſtrange.

2. A commander in the army.

If he did not nimbly ply the ſpade,
His ſurly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.
I ſummon'd all my officers in haſte,
All came reſolv'd to die in my defence Dryden.

The bad diſpoſition he made in landing his men, ſhews him not only to be much inferiour to Pompey as a ſea officer, but to have had little or no ſkill in that element. Arb.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals.

The thieves are poſſeſt with fear
So ſtrongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

OFFICERED. adj. [from officer.] Commanded, ſupplied with commanders.

What could we expect from an army officered by Iriſh papiſts and outlaws. Addiſon's Freeholder.

OFFICIAL. adj [officia Fr. from office.]

1 Conducive; appropriate with regard to their use.

This animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts officia unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2 Pertaining to a publick charge.

Favour you with the people's voice. Raleigh.

That in th' official marks invested, you

Anon do meet the senate. Shakesp. Coriolanus

Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayl.

A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY. n. s. [officialité, Fr. from office.] The charge or post of an official.

The office of an officialty to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.

To OFFICIATE. v. n. [from office.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to roll

Spaces incomprehensible, for such

Their distance argues, and their swift return

Diurnal, merely to officiate light

Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

To OFFICIATE. v. a.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.

No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforesaid law. Sanderson.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiates at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul? Stillingfleet.

To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion, which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICINAL. adj. [from officina, a shop.] Used in a shop, or belonging to it, thus officinal plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officieux, Fr. officiosus, Lat.]

1. Kind; doing good offices.

Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries

Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milt. P. Lost.

2. Importunely forward.

You are too officious

In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakesp.

At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Cato, perhaps

I'm too officious, but my forward cares

Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY. adv. [from officious.]

1. Importunately forward.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,

And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryden.

Flatt'ring crouds officiously appear,

To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.

Let thy goats officiously be nurst,

And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryd.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from officious.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South's Serm.

2. Service.

In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, force and manifestal officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Bruton's V. Err.

OFFING. n. s. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

OFFSET. n. s. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.

They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the root, producing offsets or creeping under ground. Ray.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root. Locke.

OFFSCOURING. n. s. [off and scour.] Recrement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.

Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people. Lam. iii. 45.

OFFSPRING. n. s. [off and spring.]

1. Propagation; generation.

All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation. Hooker.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendents.

When the fountain of mankind

Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;

This was a charge, that all his heirs did bind,

And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Davies

The Gods alone

Our future offspring, and our wives are known Dryd.

His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities. Addison's Spectator.

3 Production of any kind.

Tho' born early before their hour,

Time on their offspring hath no pow'r,

Nor fire nor fate their days shall blast,

Nor death's dark vail their days o'ercast. Denham.

To OFFUSCATE. v. a. [offusco, Lat. offusquer, Fr.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.

OFFUSCATION. n. s. [from offuscate.] The act of darkening.

OFT. adv. [oft, Saxon.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Cor. xi. 23

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is, it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hamm.

Favours to none, to all she smiles extends,

Oft she rejects, but never once offends. Ps. Rp. Locke.

OFTEN. adv. [from oft, Saxon; in the comparative, oftner; superlative, oftnest.] Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,

Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,

Died ev'ry day she liv'd Shakesp. Macbeth

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 1 Tim. v. 23

In journeying often, in perils in the wilderness 2 Cor. xi. 26

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison's Freeholder.

OFTENTIMES. adv. [often and times. From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities. See OFTEN.] Frequently; many times, often.

Is our faith in the blessed trinity a matter needless, to be so oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Woodw.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury

OFTTIMES. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently, often.

Oftimes nothing profits more

Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,

Well manag'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Oftimes before I hither did resort,

Charm'd with the conversation of a man

Who led a rural life Dryden and Lee.

OGE. } n. s. Is a sort of moulding in architecture, consist-

OGIVE. } ing of a round and a hollow; it is almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vitruvius calls cima. Cima reversa, as an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.

To O'GLE. v. a. [oogh, an eye, Dutch.] To view with sly glances, as in fondness, or with a design not to be heeded.

From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheek,

And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of the planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon oglings and clandestine marriages. Addison's Guardian, N°. 155.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking-glass. Martinus Scriblerius.

O'GLER. n. s. [oogheler, Dutch.] A sly gazer, one who views by side glances.

Upon the division of the neck-piece, the whole tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison's Guardian, N°. 130.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. J. Bull.

O'GLIO. n. s. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great oglio's, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He

He that keeps an open houſe, ſhould conſider that there are eghe's of gueſts, as well as of diſhes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all ſorts of intruders. L'Eſtrange.

OH. interject. An exclamation denoting pain, ſorrow, or ſurpriſe.

He,
Like a full acorn'd boar, a churning on,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

Oh me! all the horſe have got over the rivet, what ſhall we do? Walton's Angler

My eyes confeſs it,
My every action ſpeaks my heart aloud,
But oh, the madneſs of my high attempt
Speaks louder yet! Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

OIL. n. ſ. [ɔel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expreſſed.

Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light. Ex. xxvii. 20.

2. Any fat, greaſy, unctuous, thin matter.

In moſt birds there is only one gland; in which are divers cells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham's Phyſico-Theol.

3. The juices of certain vegetables, expreſſed or drawn by the ſtill without fermentation, or after the ſpirit.

Oil with chemiſts called ſulphur, is the ſecond of their hypoſtatical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, ſubtile ſubſtance, which uſually riſes after the ſpirit. The chemiſts attribute to this principle all the diverſity of colours, and all the beauty and deformity. It ſweetens the acrimony of ſalts, and by ſtopping or filling up the pores of a mixt body, keeps it longer from corruption, where it abounds. There are two ſorts of oil which ſeem to be mixt with ſpirit; for it can never be drawn pure, and which will ſwim upon water, ſuch as oil of aniſeed and lavender, which the chemiſts call eſſential, and is commonly drawn in a limbeck with ſtore of water: and another kind which probably is mixt with ſalts, and theſe will ſink in water, ſuch as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

After this expreſſed oil, we made trial of a diſtilled one, and for that purpoſe made choice of the common oil or ſpirit. Boyle.

To OIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſmear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

Amber will attract ſtraws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of braſs or iron, although they be much oiled, for in thoſe needles conſiſting free upon their center there can be no adheſion. Brown's V. Err.

Swift oils many a ſpring which Harley moves. Swift.

OIL-COLOUR. n. ſ. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured ſubſtances in oil.

Oil-colours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preſerved long in ſome degree of ſoftneſs, kept all the while under water. Boyle

OILINESS. n. ſ. [from oily.] Unctuouſneſs; greaſineſs; quality approaching to that of oil.

Baſil hath fat and ſucculent leaves; which oilineſs, if drawn forth by the ſun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable, ſo as it hath a kind of oilineſs. Bac.

Smoke from unctuous bodies and ſuch whoſe oilineſs is evident, he nameth nidor. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Chyle has the ſame principles as milk, viſcidity from the caſeous parts, an oilineſs from the butyraceous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous. Arbuthnot.

The fleſh of animals which live upon other animals, as ... ſated, though offenſive to the ſtomach ſometimes ... of their oilineſs. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

OILMAN. n. ſ. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OIL-SHOP. n. ſ. [oil and ſhop.] A ſhop where oils and pickles are ſold.

OILY. adj. [from oil.]

1. Conſiſting of oil, containing or having the qualities of oil.

The like cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not diſcharge; not becauſe it ſticketh faſter, but becauſe air preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Flame is groſſer than groſs fire, by reaſon of the mixture with it of that viſcous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, ſerves for fewel. Digby

2. Fat; greaſy.

This oily raſcal is known as well as Paul's.
Go call him forth. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

OILY-GRAIN. n. ſ. A plant.

The flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves without any footſtalk; the flower cup conſiſts of one leaf, divided into five long ſlender ſegments, the flower is of one leaf, in ſhape like thoſe of the fox-glove, the pointal, which ... in the middle of the flower, afterward becomes an obſcure four cornered pod, divided into four diſtinct cells, which ... Miller

OINTMENT. n. ſ.

It grows in great plenty on the coaſt of Guiney, as alſo in Cape Verd iſland, where it grows as high as the main maſt of a ſhip. But theſe trees have been tranſplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes, in both which places they thrive very well. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of theſe trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

To OINT. v. a. [oint, French.] To anoint; to ſmear with ſomething unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
Or from the founts where living ſulphurs boil,
They mix a med'cine to foment their limbs. Dryden.

Ismarus was not wanting to the war,
Directing ointed arrows from afar;
And death with poiſon arm'd. Dryden's Æneis.

OINTMENT. n. ſ. [from oint.] Unguent, unctuous matter to ſmear any thing.

Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again
The ſenſeleſs corpſe appointed for the grave. Fairy Q.

OKER. n. ſ. [See OCHRE.] A colour.

And Klaius taking for his younglings cark,
Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Buſy with oker did their ſhoulders mark. Sidney.

Red oker is one of the moſt heavy colours; yellow oker is not ſo, becauſe it is clearer. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

OLD. adj. [ealb, Saxon; alt, German.]

1. Paſt the middle part of life; not young.

To old age ſince you your ſelf aſpire;
Let not old age diſgrace my high deſire. Sidney.

He wooes high and low, rich and poor, young and old.
Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Wind.

2. Of long continuance, begun long ago.

When Gardiner was ſent over as embaſſador into France, with great pomp, he ſaid unto an old acquaintance of his that came to take his leave of him, Now I am in my gloria patri. Yea, ſaid his friend, and I hope, et nunc et ſemper. Or, replied the biſhop, if it pleaſe the king my maſter, ſicut erat in principio, a poor ſcholar of Cambridge again. Camden's Remains.

4. Ancient; not modern.

The Genoeſe are cunning, induſtrious, and inured to hardſhip; which was likewiſe the character of the old Ligurians. Addiſon on Italy.

5. Of any ſpecified duration.

How old art thou? Not ſo young, Sir, to love a woman for ſinging; nor ſo old to doat on her for any thing. I have years on my back forty-eight. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Plead you to me, fair dame, I know you not
In Epheſus I am but two hours old,
As ſtrange unto your town as to your talk. Shakeſp.

Any man that ſhall live to ſee thirty perſons deſcended of his body alive together, and all above three years old, makes this feaſt, which is done at the coſt of the ſtate. Bacon.

6. Subſiſting before ſomething elſe.

The Latian king, unleſs he ſhall ſubmit,
Own his old promiſe, and his new forget,
Let him in arms the pow'r of Turnus prove. Dryd.

He muſt live in danger of his houſe falling about his ears, and will find it cheaper to build it again from the ground in a new form; which may not be ſo convenient as the old. Swift's Proj. for the Advan. of Relig.

7. Long practiſed.

Have I ſaid unto her that was old in adulteries, will they now commit whoredoms with her? Ezek. xxiii. 43.

8. A word to ſignify in burleſque language, more than enough.

Here will be old Utis, it will be an excellent ſtratagem.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Here's a knocking indeed, if a man were porter of hell gate, he ſhould have old turning the key.

9. Of old, long ago; from ancient times.

So I grow ſtronger, you more honour gain. Shakeſ.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well inſtructed how to carry himſelf between Ferdinando and Philip, reſolving to keep them at one within themſelves. Bacon's Henry VII.

He is not at one with himſelf what account to give of it. Tatler, n.

10. [On, l'on, French. It is uſed ſometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any perſon. For one the Engliſh formerly uſed men; as, they live obſcurely men know not how, a long life men count not for which it would now be ſaid, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any perſon; any man indefinitely.

It is not ſo worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or neceſſity, like Ulyſſes and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney, b. ii.

One may be little the wiſer for reading this dialogue, ſince it neither ſets forth what Erona is, nor what the cauſe ſhould be which threatens her with death. Sidney, b. ii.

One would imagine theſe to be the expreſſions of a man bleſſed with eaſe, affluence and power; not of one who had been juſt ſtripped of all thoſe advantages. Atterbury.

For provoking of urine, one ſhould begin with the gentleſt firſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

For ſome time one was not thought to underſtand Ariſtotle, unleſs he had read him with Averroi's comment. Baker.

11. A perſon of particular character.

Then muſt you ſpeak
Of one that lov'd not wiſely, but too well;
Of one not eaſily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakeſp. Othello.

With lives and fortunes truſting one
Who ſo diſcreetly us'd his own. Waller

Edward I. was one that very well knew how to uſe a victory, as well as obtain it. Hare.

One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.

12. One has ſometimes a plural, either when it ſtands for perſons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to ſome thing going before, and is only the repreſentative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of ſpeech, whether ſingular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is uſed by good authors.

Theſe ſucceſſes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than ſuch ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glanville's Scepſ. Pref.

He that will overlook the true reaſon of a thing which is but one, may eaſily find many falſe ones, error being infinite. Tillotſon, Serm. 1.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the leſs uſeful becauſe they are plain ones. Atterbury.

There are many whoſe waking thoughts are wholly employed on their ſleeping ones. Addiſon's Spectator.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad ſovereign, who might poſſibly have been a good one, had he been inveſted with an authority limited by law. Addiſon's Freeholder.

This even fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers cauſes that need not be ſet down, when ſo obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears the dunces are all in conſpiracy againſt him. Swift.

ONE'EYED adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

A ſign-poſt dauber would diſdain to paint
The one-eye'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family
Of one-eye'd brothers haſten to the ſhore. Addiſon

ONEIROCRI'TICAL adj. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr. oneirocritique, Fr. ſhould therefore according to analogy be written oneirocritical and oneirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to paſs by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumſtances, he may employ himſelf in that new kind of obſervation which my oneirocritical correſpondent has directed him to make. Addiſon's Spectator.

ONEIROCRI'TICK. n. ſ. [ὀνειροκρίτης, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.

Having ſurveyed all ranks and profeſſions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 505.

ONE'NESS. n. ſ. [from one.] Unity, the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneneſs and mere unity, having nothing but itſelf in itſelf, and not conſiſting, as all things do beſides God, of many things. Hooker.

The oneneſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, referring to the ſeveral hypoſtaſes, is the one eternal individable divine nature, and the eternity of the ſon's generation, and his co-eternity, and his conſubſtantiality with the father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

ONERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens.

To O'NERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burthen.

ONERA'TION. n. ſ. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'NEROUS. adj. [onereux, Fr. oneroſus, Lat.] Burthenſome; oppreſſive.

A baniſhed perſon, that is abſent out of neceſſity, retains all things onerous to himſelf, as a puniſhment for his crime. Ayliffe's Parergon.

O'NION. n. ſ. [oignon, French.]

It hath an orbicular, coated, bulbous root; the leaves are hollow or pip; the ſtalk alſo hollow and ſwells out in the middle; the flowers conſiſting of ſix leaves are collected into a ſpherical head; the ſtyle of the flower becomes a roundiſh fruit divided into three cells, containing roundiſh ſeeds. Mill.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a ſhower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well Sha. Taming of the Shrew.
I ſhall ſee ſome onion-eyed Sha. Ant. and Cleopatra.

This is every cook's opinion,
No ſav'ry diſh without an onion.
But leſt your kiſſing ſhould be ſpoil'd,
Your onions muſt be throughly boil'd. Swift.

O'NLY adj. [from one, onely, or eneke.]

1. Single, one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my ſword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The logick now in uſe has long poſſeſſed the chair, as the only art taught in the ſchools for the direction of the mind in the ſtudy of the ſciences. Locke.

3. This above all others; as, he is the only man for muſick.

O'NLY. adv.

1. Simply; ſingly; merely; barely.

I propoſe my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.

The poſterity of the wicked taſte the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a juſt judgment, but from the natural courſe of things. Tillotſon, Serm. 4.

All who deſerve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himſelf, needs only to be known. Dryd.

Nor muſt this contrition be exerciſed by us, only for groſſer ſins, but when we live the beſt. Wake.

2. So and no otherwiſe.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

O'NOMANCY. n. ſ. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Divination by a name.

Deſtinies were ſuperſtitiouſly, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were ſuitable, and fatal neceſſities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.

ONOMA'NTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μαντικὸς.] Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the ſucceſs of his war againſt the Romans, an onomantical or name-wiſard Jew, willwilled him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to save them. Camden.

ONSET n. f. [on and set.]

1. [illegible]

As well the soldier doeth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset Sidney, b. ii.

All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop Fairy Queen, b.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing sound
Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Sometimes it gains a point, and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the antagonist afresh, plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obstinate enclosed truth. South

[illegible] without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addis.

[illegible]

The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him stedfast. Philips

2. Something added by way of ornament, appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness,
And for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress. Shakesp. Tit. And.

To ONSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin.

This for a while was hotly onsetted and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

ONSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and slay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack, storm, onset.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t'assault,
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslaught to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. f. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general, metaphysicks.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysicks, or more [illegible]

ONWARD. adv. [onbeapb, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakespeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ii.

Him thro' the spicy forest onward come
Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bow'r Milt. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward further than his nose Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friends labour Sidney.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton.

ONYCHA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone named onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell, like that of the shell-fish called purpura. The onyx is fished for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the spicanard, which is the food of this fish and what makes its flesh so aromatick. Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

ONYX. n. f. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, but the blueish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx leguma of the ancients. It is a very elegant and beautiful gem, and the regular arrangement and disposition of its colours make amends for their want of show. Hill's Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,
For guttering sand by Ophir thrown,
[illegible]

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a harsh white, and sometimes of red, when on one or both sides the white, there happens to be also a plate of a reddish or flesh colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward on Fossils.

OOZE. n. f. [either from ooze, waters, French, or par, wetness, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water, slime

My son i' th' ooze is bedded Shakesp. Tempest

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or that water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he fought his leagy bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow, spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior

From his first fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth, to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A warish humour swell'd and ooz'd again. Dryden.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
Cluster the rolling fogs. Thomson Autumn.

The lily drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the grass. Thomson.

OOZY. adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; slimy.

[illegible]

Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head. Pope.

To OPACATE v. a. [opaco, Lat.] To shade, to cloud, to darken, to obscure.

The same corpuscles upon the unstopping of the glass, did opacate that part of the air they moved in Boyle.

OPACITY n. f. [opacité, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudiness, want of transparency.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes in whose opticks there is no opacity? Brown

Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanv.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all natural bodies, are in some measure transparent, and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions caused in their internal parts. Newt. Opt.

OPACOUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtile far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms, and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whose first convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkness old,
Satan alighted. Milton's Paradise Lost,

OPAL. n. f. The opal is a very elegant and a very singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opake, and less hard. It is found always in the pebble shape of various sizes, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, smooth and glossy, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it much resembles the finest mo- [illegible] but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light, among which the green and the blue are particularly beautiful, but the fiery red is the finest of all. This stone is found in the East-Indies, in Egypt, Persia and Tartary, and in some parts of Europe, particularly in Bohemia; but the oriental is much the finest. Hill's Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

[illegible]
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn
Of living saphir. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

OPAQUE. adj. [opacus, Lat.]

They
Shot upward still direct, whence no way round
Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milt. Par. Lost.

These disappearing last stars were actually extinguished and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

It can operate on the guts and stomach, and thereby produce distinct ideas. Locke.

A plain convincing reason operates on the mind, both of a learned and ignorant hearer as long as they live. S

Where causes operate freely, with a liberty of . . . to this or the contrary, the effect will be contingent, and the certain knowledge of it belongs only to God. Watts.

OPERA'TION. n. f. [operatio, Lat. operation, French.]

1. Agency; production of effects, influence.

There are in men operations, some natural, some rational, some supernatural, some politick, some finally ecclesiastical. Hooker.

By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakesp. Lear

All operations by transmission of spirits and imagination, work at distance and not at touch. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Waller's presence had an extraordinary operation to procure any thing desired. Clarendon, b. viii.

The tree whose operation brings
Knowledge of good and ill, shun to taste. Milt. P. Lost.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The pain and sickness caused by manna, are the effects of its operation on the stomach and guts by the seize, motion and figure of its insensible parts. Locke.

2. Action, effect.

Repentance and renovation consist not in the first, wish, or purpose, but in the actual operations of good life. Hamm.

That false fruit
Far other operation first display'd,
Carnal desire inflaming. Milton's Par Lost, b. ix.

Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes; for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

In this understanding piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth and softness. But these qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

3. [In chirurgery] The part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army

O'PERATIVE. adj. [from operate.] Having the power of acting, having forcible agency.

To be over curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who not contented with a known ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths Ral.

Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty, and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison of it less operative upon others. Clarendon.

In actions of religion we should be zealous, active and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality; in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

The will is the conclusion of an operative syllogism. Norr.

OPERA'TOR. n. f. [operateur, Fr. from operate.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.

An imaginary operator opening the first with a great deal of nicety, upon a cursory view appeared like the head of another Addison's Spectator, N°. 275.

To administer this dose, there cannot be fewer than fifty thousand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty. Swift.

OPERO'SE. adj. [operosus, Latin.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediousness.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and also very operose, and would affect a great part of the universe; they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the deluge was to cease, as they were at first to procure it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Written language, as it is more operous, so it is more digested, and is permanent. Holder.

OPHIO'PHAGOUS. adj. [ὄφις and φάγω.] Serpent-eating. Not used.

All snakes are not of such poisonous qualities as common opinion presumeth; as is confirmable from ophiophagous nations, and such as feed upon serpents. Brown's V. Err.

OPHI'TES. n. f. A stone.

Ophites has a dusky greenish ground, with spots of a lighter . . . long, and . . . Woodward.

OPHTHA'LMICK. adj. [ophthalmique, Fr. from ὀφθαλμος, Gr.] Relating to the eye.

O'PHTHALMY. n. f. [ophthalmie, Fr. from ὀφθαλμος, Gr.] A disease of the eyes, being an inflammation in the coats, proceeding from arterious blood gotten out of the vessels and collected into those parts. Diet.

The use of cool applications, external ly, is most easy to the eye, but after all, there will sometimes ensue a troublesome ophthalmy. Sharp's Surgery.

O'PIATE. n. f. A medicine that causes sleep.

They chose atheism as an opiate, to still those frightful apprehensions of hell, by inducing a dulness and lethargy of mind, rather than to make use of that native and salutary medicine, a hearty repentance. Bentley's Serm.

O'PIATE. adj. Soporiferous; somniferous; narcotick; causing sleep.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments, are opiate and soporiferous. For anointing of the forehead and back bone, is used for procuring dead sleeps. Bacon.

All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more num'rous than those
Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drouze,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the past'ral reed
Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton's Par Lost.

Lettuce, which has a milky juice with an anodyne or opiate quality resolvent of the bile, is proper for melancholy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Conſider againſt what kind of opinators the reaſon above given is leveled. Hale's Origin of Mankind

To OPI'NE. v. n. [opinor, Latin.] To think, to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forſakes
And haunts by fits thoſe whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again Hudibras, p. I.

In matters of mere ſpeculation, it is not much material to the welfare of government, or of themſelves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philoſophers or no. South's Serm.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the ſhining miſchief under ground. Pope.

OPI'NIATIVE. adj. [from opinion]

1 Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2 Imagined, not proved

It is the more difficult to find out truth, becauſe it is in ſuch inconſiderable proportions ſcattered in a maſs of opiniative uncertainties, like the ſilver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanv. Scepſ. c. 6

OPINIA'TOR. n. ſ. [opiniatre, French] One fond of his own notion, inflexible, adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and ſelf-believing men diſpute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Lilex left lord Roberts governour, a man of a ſour and ſurly nature, a great opiniator, and one who muſt be overcome before he would believe that he could be ſo. Clarend.

For all his exact plot, down was he caſt from all his greatneſs, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it may befall not only but all ſuch politick opiniators ſhould. South's Serm.

OPINIA'TRE. adj. [French.] Obſtinate, ſtubborn.

Inſtead of an able man, you deſire to have him an inſignificant wrangler, opiniatre in diſcourſe, and priding himſelf in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINIA'TRETY } n. ſ. [opiniatre, French] Obſtinacy,
OPI'NIATRY. } flexibility; determination of mind; ſtubbornneſs. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Leſt popular opiniatry ſhould ariſe, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v

The one fets the thoughts upon wit and falſe colours, and not upon truth, the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and [illegible]

So much as we ourſelves conſider and comprehend of truth and reaſon, ſo much we poſſeſs of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true. What is in them was ſcience, is in us but opiniatry.

I can paſs by opiniatry and the buſy meddling of thoſe who thruſt themſelves into every thing. Wood. Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me, but he ſhall not get rid ſo. Pope.

OPINION. n. ſ. [opinion, Fr. opinio, Lat.]

1. Perſwaſion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, ſettled in the imagination, but never arriving at the underſtanding or [illegible] the tincture of reaſon. Ben. Johnſon.

[illegible]s, when the aſſent of the underſtanding is ſo far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one perſwaſion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Stiff in opinion, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

Bleſt be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happineſs is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments, judgment, notion.

Can they make it out againſt the common ſenſe and opinion of all mankind, that there is no ſuch thing as a future ſtate [illegible] for ſuch as have lived ill here. South.

[illegible]rity itſelf commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all, but friendſhip, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South's Sermons.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldeſt ſon has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philoſophers are of opinion, that infinite ſpace is poſſeſſed by God's infinite omnipreſence. Locke.

I ſhall conclude my paper with a ſtory out of Boccalini, which ſufficiently ſhews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the ſort of critics I have been here mentioning. Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 291.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms ſmall matters are of great moment, eſpecially when they ſerve to raiſe an opinion of commanders.

Howſoever I have no opinion of thoſe things; yet ſo much I conceive to be true, that ſtrong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon

To OPI'NIONATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To opinionate [illegible]. A word out of uſe, and unworthy of revival.

The ſtoicks opinionated the ſouls of wiſe men dwelt about the moon, and thoſe fools wandered about the earth whereas the Epicureans held that death was nothing, nor after death. Browne's V. Er.

That the ſoul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimenſion, is generally opinioned. Glanv. Scepſ. c. xii.

It is opinioned, that the earth reſts as the world's centre, while the heavens are the ſubject of the univerſal motion. Glanv. Scepſ. c xi

OPI'NIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion] Fond of preconceived notions, ſtubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative aſſurance, would be no hinderance to the world's improvement Glanv.

One would rather chuſe a reader without art, than one ill inſtructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

OPI'NIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly

OPI'NIONATIVENESS. n. ſ. [from opinionative] Obſtinacy.

OPI'NIONIST. n. ſ. [opinioniſte, Fr. from opinion] One fond of his own notions

Every conceited opinioniſt ſets up an infallible chair in his own brain. Glanv. to Albius

OPI'PAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Dict.

OPITULA'TION. n. ſ. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

OPIUM. n. ſ. A juice, partly of the reſinous, partly of the [illegible] and [illegible], uſually of a roundiſh figure, very heavy and of a cloſe texture, not perfectly dry; its colour is a dark brownish yellow, its ſmell is very unpleaſant, of a dead faint kind; and its taſte very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the Eaſt-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy; a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Aſia-Minor are in many places ſown as ours are with corn. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet ſoft, green and full of juice, inciſions are made in them, and from every one of theſe a few drops flow of a milky juice, which ſoon hardens into a ſolid conſiſtence. Theſe drops are gathered with great care, and the fineſt opium proceeds from the firſt inciſion. In the countries where opium is produced, multitudes are employed in preparing it with water, honey and ſpices, and working it up into cakes, but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at moſt worked up with water, or a ſmall quantity of honey ſufficient to bring it into form. The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and uſe of opium, ſome calling it a poiſon, and others the greateſt of all medicines. At preſent it is in high eſteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and diſcutient, and greatly promotes ſuppuration. A moderate doſe of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet cuſtom will make people bear a dram as a moderate doſe, but in that caſe nature is vitiated. Its firſt effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldneſs, and diſſipates the dread of danger; and for this reaſon the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger doſe than ordinary. It afterward quiets the ſpirits, eaſes pain, and diſpoſes to ſleep. After the effect of a doſe of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the ſpirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before, and the pulſe languid. An immoderate doſe of opium brings on a ſort of drunkenneſs, cheerfulneſs and loud laughter, at firſt, and, after many terrible ſymptoms, death itſelf. Thoſe who have accuſtomed themſelves to an immoderate uſe of opium, are ſubject to relaxations and weakneſſes of all the parts of the body, they are apt to be ſaſhy, idle and thoughtleſs, and are generally in a ſtupid and uncomfortable ſtate, except juſt after they have taken a freſh doſe; they loſe their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time. Hill

Sleep hath forſook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milton.

The colour and taſte of opium are, as well as its ſoporiſic or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke

OPLE TREE. n. ſ. [ople and tree] A ſort of tree. Ainſ.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. ſ. [Latin] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX n. ſ. [Latin] A gum reſin of a tolerably firm texture, in ſmall looſe granules, and ſometimes in large maſſes, which are impure. It is of a ſtrong diſagreeable ſmell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taſte. It is brought to us from the OPPILATIVE adj. [oppilative, Fr.] Obstructive.

OPPLE'TED, adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled, crouded.

OPPO'NENT adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite, adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still sought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPONENT, n. f. [opponens, Lat.]

1. Antagonist, adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto, that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopous exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator More.

OPPORTU'NE adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Seasonable, convenient, fit, timely, well-timed, proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's fe-
[illegible] and the perpetuancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTU'NELY, adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently, with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate so opportunely to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportunely induced to say somewhat. Wotton's Architecture.

This experiment does opportunely supply the deficiency. Boyle

OPPORTU'NITY, n. f. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time, place, time, convenience; suitableness of circumstances to any end.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds
Mens behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight but free for exercise. Bacon, Essay 53.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accursed opportunity!
That work'st our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions, those being ripe and quicken'd,
Thou gav'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action.
Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length shall notes opportunities. Denham.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterb.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To OPPO'SE, v. a [opposer, French, oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse, to hinder, to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition, to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are, and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his. Herb. of Prince

I thro' me sea pursued the realm to race
Engaging heavens, oppos'd the stormy main,
But bid vows rend and tempests rage in vain. Dryden

4. To place in front.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people Shakespeare

5. To act as

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shakesp. King Lear

He practised to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to encumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation, to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPO'SELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irresistible, not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills. Shakespeare.

OPPO'SER, n. f. [from oppose.] One that opposes, antagonist, enemy, rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers swords bold gentleman!

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality, yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Granv.

I do not see how the monsters could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Buckinghame.

OPPOSITE, adj. [opposite, Fr. oppositus, Lat.]

1. Placed in front, facing each other.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, trine and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. Adverse; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure, opposite to that which is delighted in an epick poem. Dryd.

Thus is a prospect very uneasy to the lusts and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. Rogers

3. Contrary

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin. Tillotson, Serm. 1.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

OPPOSITE, n. f. Adversary; opponent, antagonist, enemy.

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a froward opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections, their virtues it afterwards as much admireth. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.

He is the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could have found in Illyria. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

OPPOSITELY, adv. [from opposite.]

1. In such a situation as to face each other.

The lesser pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppositely with their points downward, but upward. Grew's Musæ.

2. Adversely

I oft have seen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. May's Virgil

OPPOSITENESS, n. f. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSITION n. f. [opposition, Fr. oppositio, Lat.]

1. Situation so as to front something opposed.
2. Hostile resistance

He
Cry'd oh! and mounted, found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose
Virtue which breaks thro' all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton.

He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Contrariety of affection

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, are

are the laws of God not by the [illegible] nsical goodneſs, but by the reluctancy and oppoſition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotſon, Serm. 6.

4. Contrariety of intereſt, contrariety of meaſures.

[illegible] riety of meaning, diverſity of meaning.

[illegible] e parts of every true oppoſition do alway both concern the ſame ſubject, and have reference to the ſame thing, ſith otherwiſe they are but in ſhew oppoſite, and not in truth Hooker, b. v. ſ. 4.

Reaſon can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is leſs evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in oppoſition to knowledge and certainty Locke.

To O'PPRESS. v. a. [oppreſſus, Lat.]

14. [In architecture.] A ſyſtem of the ſeveral members, or ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilaſters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, eſpecially thoſe of a column, ſo as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which ſome of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns, three of which are Greek, viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian, and two Italian, viz. the tuſcan and compoſite. The whole is compoſed of two parts at leaſt, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the moſt; where there is a pedeſtal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedeſtal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the baſe, the ſhaft, and the capital, which parts are all different in the ſeveral orders.

In the tuſcan order, any height being given, divide it into [illegible] is meant the thickneſs of the ſhaft at the bottom, the [illegible] and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedeſtal [illegible] blature two

In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having two and two thirds, [illegible]

In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the compoſite order, the whole height is [illegible] teen diameters and one third; the pedeſtal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or ſpace between columns in the tuſcan order, is four diameters. In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic order, two and a quarter, in the corinthian order, two; and in the compoſite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all thy sins remember'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me,
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shakesp.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Baron's Henry VII.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks shrill orisons, to be
An anthem at the day's nativity. Crashaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.

Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began
Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Cotton.

Here at dead of night
The hermit oft, and his orisons, hears
Aghast the voice of time departing tow'rs. Dyer.

O'RLOP. n. f. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Skinn.

A small ship of the king's called the Pensie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Pensie so applyed her shot, that the Lyon's orlop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hayward.

O'RNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat. ornement, Fr.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shakesp.

The Tuscan chief, to me has sent
Their crown, and ev'ry regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers, Serm. 9.

2. Honour; that which confers dignity

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

ORNAME'NTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the Heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the creator Woodw. Nat. Hist.

If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

ORNAME'NTALLY adv. [from ornamental] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

ORNA'MENTED. adj. [from ornament] Embellished; bedecked.

O'RNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat] Bedecked, decorated; fine.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered.
Such is the state of man. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,

To wring the widow from her cuſtom'd right,
And have no other reaſon for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a ſolemn oath? Shakeſp.
Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The ſea with ſpoils his angry billets ſtrow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpleſs orphan whom thou leav'ſt behind. Dryden.

ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.

This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his eſtate, when he came to age, ſo diſjointed even in the nobleſt and ſtrongeſt limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney, b. ii.

ORPHANAGE, } n. ſ. [orphelinage, Fr. from orphan.] State
ORPHANISM. } of an orphan.

ORPIMENT n. ſ. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]

True and genuine orpiment is a ſolid foſſil, ſometimes found in maſſes of two or three inches diameter, and one inch in thickneſs, but it is oftener met with in ſmaller congeries of flakes from the length of an inch to a third in diameter, lodged in zarnich. See ZARNICH. It is of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold [illegible] hard but very tough, eaſily bending without breaking: [illegible] have declared orpiment to be only maſcovy talk, ſtained by accident. But talks always elaſtick, but orpiment not ſo; talk alſo remains unaltered in the ſtrongeſt fire, whereas orpiment melts readily, and as readily burns away. Orpiment has been ſuppoſed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, ſilver, and copper, and ſometimes in the ſtrata of marl. It is frequent in the Eaſt Indies and the Turkiſh dominions, the fineſt coming from Smyrna. We have it alſo in Germany and Saxony. The ancients were well acquainted with this drug, which they called arſenicon, and though they were utterly unacquainted with the poiſonous ſubſtance called arſenick, yet orpiment has been by ſome very unjuſtly deemed a poiſon; but it appears to be an innocent medicine which the ancients preſcribed internally. The painters are very fond of it as a gold colour. Hill's Mat. Med.

For the golden colour, it may be made by ſome ſmall mixture of orpiment, ſuch as they uſe to braſs in the yellow alchymy, it will eaſily recover that which the iron loſeth. Bacon.

[illegible] for orphans.

ORRIS. n. ſ. [orpin, Fr.] Liverer or roſe root, maccampferat, Teapbium, or Rhodia radix. A plant. It hath a roſe ſhaped flower, conſiſting of ſeveral leaves placed orbicularly; out of whoſe many leaved empalement riſes the pointal, which afterward becomes a three-cornered fruit, conſiſting of one cell, which is filled with roundiſh ſeeds: the leaves are placed alternately on the branches. It is a low plant, whoſe branches trail the ground, the leaves are ſmall and roundiſh, of a glaucous colour, and of a pretty thick conſiſtence. The flowers [illegible] all, and of a whitiſh green colour. Miller.

Coot vials and orpine growing ſtill,
Embroidered balm and cheerful galingale. Spenſer.

ORRERY. n. ſ. An inſtrument which by many complicated [illegible]

It was firſt made by Mr Rowley, a mathematician born at [illegible]field, and ſo named from his patron the earl of Orrery, one or other of this family almoſt every art has been encouraged or improved.

ORRIS n. ſ. [orris, Latin.] A plant and flower.

It hath no leaves to the flower, but conſiſts of many ſtamina ariſing from a five-leaved empalement. The pointal becomes the ſeed, which is flat and orbicular, and incloſed in the empalement, which becomes a ſubſtaceous capſule, in which are included two ſorts of ſeeds. Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almoſt ſingular; for roots that are in any degree ſweet, it is but the ſame ſweetneſs with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not ſweet in the leaf; ther is the flower any thing ſo ſweet as the root. Bacon.

[illegible] [old Fr.] A ſort of gold or ſilver lace.

ORTS n. ſ. ſeldom with a ſingular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Mr Lye more reaſonably from ord, Iriſh, a fragment. In Anglo Saxon, ord ſignifies the beginning, whence in ſome provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends ſignify remnants, ſcattered pieces, refuſe; from ord thus uſed probably came ort.] Refuſe; things left or thrown away.

He muſt be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-ſpirited fellow, one that feeds
On abjects orts and imitations. Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſ.
[illegible]
The fragments, ſcraps, the bits, and greaſy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomede. Shakeſp.
Much good do't you then,
Brave plush and velvet men,
Can feed on orts and ſafe in your ſtage-cloths,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The ſtagers, and the ſtage-wrights too. Ben. Johnſon.

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθὸς and δόξα; orthodox, Fr.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical.

Be you perſuaded and ſettled in the true proteſtant religion profeſſed by the church of England, which is as ſound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Chriſtian church in the world. Bacon.

Eternal bliſs is not immediately ſuperſtructed on the moſt orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour ſaith, if ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them, the doing muſt be firſt ſuperſtructed on the knowing or believing, before any happineſs can be built on it. Hammond.

ORTHODOXLY. adv. [from orthodox.] With ſoundneſs of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expreſſed in the thirty-nine articles, is ſo ſoundly and ſo orthodoxly ſettled, as cannot be queſtioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.

ORTHODOXY n. ſ. [ὀρθὸς δόξα, orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundneſs in opinion and doctrine.

I do not attempt explaining the myſteries of the chriſtian religion, ſince Providence intended there ſhould be myſteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good ſenſe, to go about it. Swift.

ORTHODROMICKS. n. ſ. [from ὀρθὸς and δρόμος.] The art of ſailing in the ark of ſome great circle, which is the ſhorteſt or ſtraighteſt diſtance between any two points on the ſurface of the globe. Harris.

2. According to the elevation.

ORTHOGRAPHY. n. ſ. [ὀρθὸς and γράφω, orthographie, Fr.]

1. The part of grammar which teaches how words ſhould be ſpelled.

This would render languages much more eaſy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and eſpecially as to the writing them, which now as they ſtand we find to be troubleſome, and it is no ſmall part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.

2. The art or practice of ſpelling.

In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the ſuburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound orthography. Swift.

3. The elevation of a building delineated.

You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plat, and the explanation thereof with a ſcale of feet and inches. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

ORTHOPNOEA. n. ſ. [ὀρθόπνοια; orthopnée, Fr.] A diſorder of the lungs, in which reſpiration can be performed only in an erect poſture.

His diſeaſe was an aſthma oft turning to an orthopnœa, the cauſe a tranſlation of ſalurous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Conſumptions.

OSCITANCY. n. f. [ofcitantia, Lat.]

1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.

If persons of so circumspect a piety, have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless ofcitancy? Government of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the ofcitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addison's Spectator, N°. 470.

OSCITANT. adj. [ofcitans, Latin.]

1. Yawning, unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.

Our ofcitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again for more active duty. Decay of Piety.

OSCITATION. n. f. [ofcito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of ofcitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, N°. 63.

OSIER. n. f. [ofier, French.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of oziers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shak.

[illegible]

I must fill up this ofier cage of ours
With baneful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakesp.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and ofiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut. May's Virg.

Like her no nymph can wishing ofiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryd.

Along the marshes spread,
We made the ofier fringed bank our bed. Ps. Odyss.

OSSICLE. n. f. [officulum, Latin.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these officles, fixt to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindred from coming into the ear. Holder on Speech.

OSSIFICK. adj. [offa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its offific faculty, to thrust out a callus, and make separation of its caries. Wiseman.

OSSIFICATION. n. f. [from offify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Offifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

OSSIFRAGE. n. f. [offifraga, Lat. offifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The offifrega or ofprey, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins called it ossifraga. Calmet.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle and the offifrage, and the ospray. Numb. xi. 13.

It is very large, its wings very ſhort, [illegible] wings are in great eſteem, and are uſed as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are ſtained of ſeveral colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly, but uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running more ſwiftly. The oſtrich ſwallows bits of iron or braſs, in the ſame manner as other birds will ſwallow ſmall ſtones or gravel, to aſſiſt in digeſting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the ſand, and the ſun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an oſtrich, and ſwallow my ſword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakeſp.

Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the oſtrich. Job xxxix. 13.

The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their oſtrich ſtomachs make their ſwords their meat. Cleav.

Modern oſtriches are dwindled to meer larks, in compariſon with thoſe of the ancients. Arbuthnot

OTACOU'STICK. n. ſ. [ὦτα and ἀκέω; otacouſtique, Fr.] An inſtrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is ſupplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacouſtick, is ſo directed backward, as to receive the ſmalleſt and moſt diſtant ſound that comes behind her. Grew's Coſmo. b. 1.

Men ſeldom conſider God any otherwiſe than in relation to themſelves, and therefore want ſome extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love. Rogers.

OTTER n. ſ. [oter, Saxon.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fiſh.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better ſwimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver, from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is ſelin, or a long taper: ſo that he may not be unfitly called putorius aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himſelf burrows on the water ſide, as a beaver; is ſometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly ſurrounding the fiſhes to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's ſkin ſtuffed with hay. Addiſon's Spectator, N°. 115.

Would you preſerve a num'rous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chaſe;
Th' amphibious monſter ranges all the ſhores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores. Gay.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; reſembling the longitudinal ſection of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itſelf on both ſides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addiſon on Italy.

[illegible] reſt to the centre fall,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our ſight,
In ſolar glory ſunk. Blackmore on Creat. b. ii.

O'VAL. n. ſ.

A ſynonimous word, or a mere negation of the contrary; a tranſlation of the word into another tongue, or a grammatical explication of it, is ſometimes ſufficient; as a triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the ſhape of an egg. Watts's Logick.

OVA'RIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Conſiſting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomſon.

A flake of fire, that flaſhing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Fairy Queen.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakesp.

Rats have been found in ovens and other hollow cole places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

O'VER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon oppe, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibson's Camden

[ufar, Gothick, oppe, Saxon.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity

How happy some, o'er other some can be! Shakesp.

Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest,

Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest. Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown,

You fought our safety, but forgot your own. D

The commentator which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Advert. to Pope's Dunciad.

Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea South's Sermons.

9. With repetition, another tone

He o'er and o'er divides him,

'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakespeare.

Sting or fly-blowing fell contents to roar,

In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,

Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,

My parents, brothers, and my lord in one

Could not all my kindred o'er again,

Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain,

But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain Dryden

Whenever children correct or do an action awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke on Education.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose, since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

All continent impediment would over-bear,
That did oppoſe my will. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

The ocean o'er-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſpeare.

Our counſin, if preſs'd your highneſs
To over-bear. Shakeſp. King John.

Gloſter, thou ſhalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The biſhop will be over-borne by thee. Shakeſp.

The Turkiſh commanders, with all their forces, aſſailed the city, thruſting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have diſcouraged or over-born the Chriſtians. Knolles

The point of reputation, when news firſt came of the battle loſt, did over-bear the reaſon of war. Bacon.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long reſiſting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a ſhadow, rapid ſtream, as ſwallowed up in the gulph of ſmooth water. L'Eſtrange.

Crowding on the laſt the firſt impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fall. Dryden.

The judgment, if ſwayed by the over-bearing of paſſion, and ſtored with lubricous opinions inſtead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanv. Scepſ. c. 27.

1. To cloud, to darken, to cover with gloom.

As they past,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Fairy Queen.
Hie, Robin, over-cast the night,
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shakesp.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever shining mind. Waller.
Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.
The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day Addison

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is inclosed with a thread, over-.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it over-casteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast. Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king in his account of peace and arms, did much over-cast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon's Henry VII

To O'VER-CHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress, to cloy, to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid way. Raleigh's Hist. of the World

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.

He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakesp

You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office. Shakespeare.

OUR pron. poss. [ure, Saxon.]

1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.

You shall
Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shakespeare.

Our will is given almighty God to know,
Our will is given to love him being known;
But God could not be known to us below,
But by his works which through the sense are shown.
So in our little world this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
And so are her effects diversify'd Davies.

2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.
Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe, to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliv'rance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakesp. Tempest
Fate, these are your forces, ourselves we do not owe,
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakesp.
Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday. Shakesp. Othello.
If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

5. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety Bolinbroke was aware, and, having no quick sense of the force of English words, has used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; Bolinbroke says, the effect is due to the cause.

6. Consequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

7. Due as a debt.

You are both too bold,
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

8. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we eliminate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them 99/100 to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

Owl. } n. s. [ole, Saxon; hulote, French and Scottish.] A
O'wlet. } bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing
For a charm. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakesp.
'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay,
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bow'r. Dunciad.

O'wler. n. s. One who carries contraband goods. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift
We understand by some owlers, old people die in France.
Tatler, N°. 56.

OWN. n. s. [agen, Saxon; eygen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle owen or own, my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakesp.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

It is consent rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestick, not foreign, mine, his, or yours, not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Feel in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing fitter than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To Own v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

Hadst thy fiery heart so parcht thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall. Shakesp.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Lybian air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. Par. Lost

I am stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryd.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky,
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry.
Dryden's Horace.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe.

PA'RITY. n. ſ. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality, reſemblance.

We may here juſtly tax the diſhoneſty and ſhameleſneſs of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain ſtoical parity of ſins. Hall.

That Chriſt or his apoſtles ever commanded to ſet up ſuch a parity of preſbyters, and in ſuch a way as thoſe Scots endeavour, I think is not very diſputable. K. Charles.

Survey the total ſet of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progreſſion, obſerve an equality of length and parity of numeration; that is, not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one ſide not exactly anſwered by the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Thoſe accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the diſcovery of ſuch an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hoſe.

Their agreement, in eſſential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their huſbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reaſon, we may argue, if a man has no ſenſe of thoſe kindneſſes that paſs upon him, from one like himſelf, whom he ſees and knows, how much leſs ſhall his heart be affected with the grateful ſenſe of his favours, whom he converſes with only by imperfect ſpeculations, by the diſcourſes of reaſon, or the diſcoveries of faith. South's Sermons.

By parity of reaſon, we muſt expect a peace ſo much worſe about two years hence. Swift's Miſcellan

PARK. n. ſ. [peanpuc, Sax. parc, Fr.] A piece of ground incloſed and ſtored with wild beaſts of chaſe, which a man may have by preſcription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his foreſt laws, defines it thus a park is a place for privilege for wild beaſts of venery, and alſo for other wild beaſts, that are beaſts of the foreſt and of the chaſe, and thoſe wild beaſts are to have a firm peace and protection there, ſo that no man may hurt or chaſe them within the park, without licenſe of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chaſe or a warren; for a park muſt be incloſed, and may not lie open, if it does, it is a good cauſe of ſeizure into the king's hands, and the owner cannot have action againſt ſuch as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowel.

We have parks and incloſures of all ſorts of beaſts and birds, which we uſe not only for view or rareneſs, but likewiſe for diſſections and trials. Bacon.

To PARK.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?

In thy opinion, which is worthiest love. Shakesp.
Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. [illegible]
The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.
Why meet we thus like wrangling advocates,
To urge the justice of our cause with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame, if we must meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.

To PA'RLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth, to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war, for a meeting of enemies to talk.

[illegible] vise him to proceed. Broome.

PA'RLEY, n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty, talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley, to recover them than by the sword. Sid.
Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.
A rotten case abides no handling. Shakesp.
In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakesp.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakesp.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.

No gentle means could be essay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.
Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.
Yet when some better fated youth
Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PA'RLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws, which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowel.

The king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament. Shakesp.
Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakesp.

The true use of parliaments is very excellent, and be often c[illegible]

I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.

These are mob readers, if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry [illegible] Dryden.

PARLIAME'NTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; suiting the parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or sines, and conquest, were added two more, the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Back again fair Alma led them right,
And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Fa. Queen.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and sides were like a parlour made,
A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.

PA'RLOUS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak, but Junius derives it, I think, rightly, from per, I us, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus.] Keen, sprightly; waggish.

Midas durst communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of state,
One must be trusted, and he though her fit,
As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

To PERFO'RM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.

When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errors. Watts.

PERFORMABLE. adj. [from perform.] Practicable; such as may be done.

Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PERFO'RMANCE. n. f. [from perform.]

1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.

His promises were, as he then was, mighty,
But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shakesp.

Promising is the very air o' the time; it opens the eyes of expectation. performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people, the deed is quite out of use. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

Perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance. 2 Cor. viii. 11.

The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt. South.

2. Composition, work.

In the good poems of other men, I can only be sure, that 'tis the hand of a good master; but in your performances 'tis scarcely possible for me to be deceived. Dryden.

Few of our comic performances give good examples. Clarif.

3. Action; something done.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shakesp.

PERFO'RMER. n. f. [from perform.]

1. One that performs any thing.

The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. Shakesp.

2. It is generally applied to one that makes a publick exhibition of his skill.

To PERFRICATE. v. n. [perfrico, Lat.] To rub over. Dict.

PERFUMATORY. adj. [from perfume.] That which perfumes.

PERFUME. n. f. [parfume, Fr.]

1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.

Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, which is part of the use that they take effect by. Bacon.

Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly wasted, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it. Digby.

2. Sweet odour; fragrance.

No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield. Pope.

To PERFUME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.

Your paps
Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself
To whom they go. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakesp.

Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd. Shakesp.

The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan. Bacon's Natural History.

Smells adhere to hard bodies, as in perfuming of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The pains she takes are vainly meant,
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art. Granville.

See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies! Pope.

PERFU'MER. n. f. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

A moss the perfumers have out of apple trees, that hath an excellent scent. Bacon's Natural History.

First issued from perfumers shops
A croud of fashionable fops. Swift.

PERFU'NCTORILY. adv. [perfunctorie, Lat.] Carelessly; negligently.

His majesty casting his eye perfunctorily upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord-keeper. Clarendon.

Whereas all logic is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle very perfunctorily; of the fourth he has said nothing at all. Baker's Reflection on Learning.

PERFU'NCTORY. adj. [perfunctorie, Lat.] Slight; careless; negligent.

A transient and perfunctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected. Woodward.

To PERFU'SE. v. a. [perfusus, Lat.] To tincture; to overspread.

These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions. Harvey on Consumptions.

PERHAPS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure, it may be.

Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run. Flatman.

Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place. Dryden.

His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love.
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps soft pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him.
Smith.

PE'RIAPT. n. f. [περίαπτον.] Amulet; charm worn as preservatives against diseases or mischief. Hanmer.

The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly:
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts. Shakespeare.

PERICARDIUM. n. f. [περὶ and καρδία; pericarde, Fr.]

The pericardium is a thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity. its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion. Quincy.

PERICARPIUM. n. f. [pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelops the seed.

Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals. Ray.

PERICLITATION. n. f. [from periclitor, Lat. pericliter, Fr.]

1. The state of being in danger.

2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRA'NIUM. n. f. [from περὶ and cranium; pericrane, Fr.] The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth, for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wiseman's Surgery.

PERI'CULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Lat.] Dangerous; jeopardous. Dict.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculous periods. Brown.

PERIE'RGY. n. f. [περὶ and ἔργον.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGEE, PERIGEUM. n. f. [περὶ and γῆ; perigee, Fr.] Is a point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be at its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PERIHE'LIUM. n. f. [περὶ and ἥλιος; perihelie, Fr.] Is that point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

PE'RIL. n. f. [peril, Fr. periel, Dutch, periculum, Lat.]

1. Danger, hazard, jeopardy.

Dear Pyrocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney, b. ii.

How many perils do infold
The righteous man to make him daily fall. Fairy Queen.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden

Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbuthn.

2. Denunciation; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

PE'RILOUS. adj. [perileux, Fr. from peril.]

1. Dangerous; hazardous, full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker, b. v. s. 2.

Her guard is chastity,
She that has that is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.
Dictate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful seer,
For perilous th' allay, unheard the toil
Conclude the prescience of a God by guile. Pope.
In to the perilous flood
Bear fearless. Thomson.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous shrewd. Hudibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit, do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous.

'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakesp.

PE'RILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

PE'RILOUSNESS. n. f. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.

PERIMETER. n. f. [περὶ and μέτρεω; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton's Opticks.

PE'RIOD. n. f. [periode, Fr. περίοδος.]

1. A circuit.

2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end too, and then begins again as often as it chuses. Holder on Time.

We have a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakesp.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods,
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater fate,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suckling

Light-conserving stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the night will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon's Natural History.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long; for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Johns.

Is this the confidence you gave me,
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unlaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, can. wrapt up in a smooth period. L'Estrange.

For the assistance of weak memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

From the tongue
Th' unfinish'd period falls. Thomson's Spring.

To PE'RIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him,
Periods his comfort. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

PERIO'DICK. } adj. [periodique, Fr. from period.]
PERIODICAL. }

1. Circular, making a circuit, making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some slimy soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable end periodical conjunctions. Ray.

Still when the luſt of tyrant pow'r ſucceeds,
Some Athens periſhes, or ſome Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had cauſed the death of ſo many Grecians; and in the Odyſſey, the ſubjects periſhed through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual ſtate of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of periſhing diſtance, of which no two parts exiſt together, but follow in ſucceſſion; as expanſion is the idea of laſting diſtance, all whoſe parts exiſt together. Locke

3. To be loſt eternally.

Theſe, as natural brute beaſts made to be deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh. 2 Peter ii. 12

O ſuffer me not to periſh in my ſins, Lord careſt thou not that I periſh, who wilt that all ſhould be ſaved, and that none ſhould periſh. Moreton's Daily Exerciſe.

To PE'RISH, v. a. To deſtroy, to decay. Not in uſe

The ſpouting rocks cow'r'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides;
Becauſe thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace periſh Margaret. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Kate, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy periſh'd lord. Dryden.

He was ſo reſerved, that he would impart his ſecrets to nobody, whereupon this coldneſs did a little periſh his underſtandings Collier on Friendſhip.

Pain'd har now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a periſh'd lord alone. Pope.

PE'RISHABLE adj. [from periſh.] Liable to periſh; ſubject to decay; of ſhort duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to aſcribe to them the ſame dominion over our immortal ſouls, which they have over all bodily ſubſtances and periſhable natures. Raleigh.

To theſe purpoſes nothing can ſo much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not periſhable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addiſon.

It is princes greateſt preſent felicity to reign in their ſubjects hearts; but theſe are too periſhable to preſerve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful hiſtorians. Swift.

Human nature could not ſuſtain the reflection of having all its ſchemes and expectations to determine with this frail and periſhable compoſition of fleſh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he ſeen the periſhable kind

PE'RISHABLENESS n. ſ. [from periſhable.] Liableneſs to be deſtroyed, liableneſs to decay.

Suppoſe an iſland ſeparate from all commerce, but having nothing becauſe of its commoneſs and periſhableneſs, fit to ſupply the place of money, what reaſon could any have to enlarge his poſſeſſions beyond the uſe of his family. Locke.

PE'RMANENCY } stency; continuance in the same state, last-
[illegible]

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain uncompacted. Boyle.

Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanence or fixedness in being. Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.

PE'RMANENT. adj. [permanent, Fr permanens, Lat] Durable, not decaying, unchanged

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker b. iii. f. 10.

That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From sins, as did my frailer innocence,
Their joy sincere, and with no more sorrow mixt,
Eternity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

PE'RMANENTLY adv. [from permanent.] Durably; lastingly.

It does, like a compact or consistent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.

PIKE. n. f. [pique, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The luce or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: they are bred some by generation, and some not; as namely of a weed called pickerel-weed, unless Gesner be much mistaken, for he says, this weed and other gummous matter, with the heat of the sun's heat in some particular months, and in some ponds apted for it by nature, do become pikes: doubtless divers pikes are bred after this manner, or are brought into some ponds some other ways, that is past man's finding out. Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years, and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not. Walton's Angler.

In a pond into which were put several fish and two pikes, upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the pikes grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn. Hale.

The pike the tyrant of the floods. Pope.

The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, conſiſting of ſeveral ſlender ſtamina, which are all collected into ſpherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on ſeparate parts of the ſame trees, are turged, and afterwards become large ſpherical balls, containing many oblong ſeeds intermixed with down: it is generally ſuppoſed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.
The beech, the ſwimming alder and the plane. Dryd.

PLA'NET. n. ſ. [planeta, Lat. πλανητης; planette, Fr.]
Planets are the erratick or wandering ſtars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the ſame poſition to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, becauſe we know it moves round the ſun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the ſecondary planets or ſatellites of the primary, ſince ſhe moves round the earth: all the planets have, beſides their motion round the ſun, which makes their year, alſo a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving ſo makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know 'tis ſo in our earth, and Flamſteed and Caſſini found it to be ſo in Jupiter. Sir Iſaac Newton aſſerts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four four thousand; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains[1] hath this lovely face
Ruled like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent Shakesp.

And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

PLANETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Creech.

2. Under the dominion of any particular planet.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,
That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human shape
Had altered. Dryden.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think, I have a piece of that leaden planet in me, I am no way facetious. Addison's Spectator, N° 487.

3. Produced by the planets.

Here's gold, go on,
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Having the nature of a planet, erratick.

We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move,
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackm.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planoconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton's Opticks.

PLANT. n. s. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed, any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has reduced under twenty-seven genders or kinds. 1. Those which do either totally want both flower and seed, or seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminous flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petals, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with downe, but emit no milk. 6. The herbæ capitatæ, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no downe adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella. [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tuberose root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelled or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star. their flowers are really monopetalous; divided into four segments, which look like so many petals; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants, they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticilate plants. their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another, their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyspermæ plantæ semine nudo, by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod. 16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multisiliquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cases or siliquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either in form or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong siliquous cases. 20. Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulse, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth. the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf, they have no foot stalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is sexapetalous. 24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and its leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or staminous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely crop't. Shakesp.

Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A fellow, finding somewhat prick him, *pop*t his finger upon the place. L'Estrange's Fables.

The commonwealth popped up its head for the third time under Brutus and Cassius, and then sunk for ever. Dryden.

Did it thou never pop
Thy head into a barman's shop? Prior.

2. To flirt.

If their curiosity leads them to ask what they should not know, it is better to tell them plainly, that it is a thing that belongs not to them to know, than to pop them off with a falsehood. Locke on Education.

POPE. n. s. [papa, Lat. παππας.]

1. The bishop of Rome.

I refuse you for my judge; and
Appeal unto the pope to be judg'd by him. Shakesp.

He was organist in the pope's chapel at Rome. Peacham.

Christianity has been more oppressed by those that thus fought for it, than those that were in arms against it; upon this score, the pope has done her more harm than the Turk. Decay of Piety.

2. A small fish.

A pope, by some called a ruffe, is much like a pearch for shape, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon: he is an excellent fish, of a pleasant taste, and spawns in April. Walton's Angler.

POPEDOM. [pope and dom.] Papacy; papal dignity.

That world of wealth I've drawn together
For mine own ends, indeed, to gain the popedom. Shakesp.

POPLAR. n. s. [peuplier, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren: the female trees produce membraneous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Miller.

Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacham on Drawing.

All he describ'd was present to their eyes,
And as he rais'd his verse, the poplars seem'd to rise. Rose.

So fair a poplar, that in watry ground
Rais'd high the head. Pope's Iliad.

POPPY. n. s. [popig, Sax. papaver, Lat.] A plant.

The flower of the poppy, for the most part, consists of four leaves, placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup, consisting of two leaves, rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a fruit or pod that is oval or oblong, and adorned with a little head, under which, in some species, is opened a series of holes quite round into the cavity of the fruit, which is defended lengthwise with various leaves or plates, to which a great number of very small seeds adhere: of these are eighteen species. Some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

His temples laft with poppies were o'erfpread,
That nodding feem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.

Dr Lifter has been guilty of a miftake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the fleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addifon's Remarks on Italy.

The beft temper of minds defireth good name and true honour, the lighter, popularity and applaufe, the more depraved, fubjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden

Admire we then,
Or popularity, or ftars, or ftrings,
The mob's applaufes, or the gifts of kings. Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might reprefent as popularity. Swift

2. Repreſentation fuited to vulgar conception, what affects the vulgar

The perfuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by found reafons, fo it may be repreſented alſo by colours, popularities and circumftances, which way the ordinary judgment. Bacon

POPULARLY. adv. [from popular]

1. In a popular manner, ſo as to pleaſe the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the falutations of the crowd. Dryden.

Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception

Nor can we excuſe the duty of our knowledge, if we only beſtow thoſe commendatory concetts, which popularly ſet forth the eminency thereof Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.

When there be great ſhoals of people, which go out to populate, without foreſeeing means of life and ſuſtentation, it is of neceſſity, that once in an age they diſcharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Eſſays

POPULATION n. f. [from populate.] The ſtate of a country with reſpect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom, eſpecially if it be [illegible] down by wars, does not exceed the ſtock of the [illegible], which ſhould maintain them, neither is the population [illegible] reckoned, only by number; for a ſmaller number, that ſpend more and earn leſs, do wear out an eſtate ſooner than a greater number, that live ſower, and gather more. Bacon.

[illegible]

2. People

[illegible] conducent unto population, we ſhall [illegible] but little doubt, there are two main cauſes of numeroſity in any [illegible], a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Brown.

PORE. n. f. [πορος Fr. πορος.]

1. Spiracle of the ſkin; paſſage of perſpiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themſelves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themſelves all over, may juſtly move a man to think, that theſe fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by ſtopping of the pores, ſhut in the vapours, and ſend them to the head extremely Bac.

Why was the ſight
To ſuch a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and ſo eaſy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That ſhe might look at will through every pore. Milton.

2. Any narrow ſpiracle or paſſage.

Pores are ſmall interſtices between the particles of matter which conſtitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of vaines milk and nectar broke,
And honey ſweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

To PORE. v. n. [πορος is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from ſome Engliſh word.] To look with great attenteneſs and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that moſt vain,
Which with pain purchaſ'd, doth inherit pain,
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To ſeek the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falſely blind the eyeſight, Shakeſp.

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope

He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.

PO'REBLIND adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Nearsighted, shortsighted.

Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters, for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon's Natural History.

PO'RENESS. n. f. [from pory.] Fullness of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poreness of the bone below. Wiseman.

To shut up thy porklings, thou meanest to fat. Tusser.

POROSITY n. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser Bacon's Natural History.

POROUS. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages

The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light, firm to retain
Her gather'd beams, great palace now of light. Milton

POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having [illegible] Locke.

PORPHYRE. } n. f. [from πορφυρα, porphyrites, Lat. porphyre,
PORPHYRY. } Fr.] [illegible]

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacham on Drawing

Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Lock

PO'RPOISE
PORPUS. } n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatick together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoyes have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.

Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst,
And then I drag a bloated corpus
Swell'd with a dropsy like a porpus. Swift.

PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.]

1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who daubs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estrange.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd, Swift

2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headdress; of which perhaps the first of these passages may shew the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakesp.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The city ports by this hath entered. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other desolate and overgrown with grass, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issued.

3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.

At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Raleigh

The anchocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden

4. [Porte, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance, demeanour.

Various, with boaſtful argument portray'd. Milton.

PO'RTRESS. n. ſ. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate. Jamieſon.

The portreſs of Nile gate reply'd. Milton's Par. L.
The ſhoes put on, our faithful portreſs
Admits us in to ſtorm the fortreſs,
While like a cat with walnuts thou,

PO'RWIGLE. n. ſ. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully ſhaped.

That black and round ſubſtance began to grow oval, a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be diſcernible, and at laſt to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Er.

PO'RY adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd th' admiring ſon
Beholds the vaulted roofs of pory ſtone. Dryden.

To PO'SE. v. a. [from poſe, an old word ſignifying heavineſs of ſleep.]

1. To puzzle, to gravel, to put to a ſtand or ſtop.

Learning was poſed, philoſophy was fet,
Sophiſters taken in a fiſher's net. Herbert.
How God's eternal reaſon ſhould be man's brother,
Poſeth his proudeſt intellectual power. Crashaw.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I ſhall give the following inſtances of our intellectual blindneſs, not that I deſign to poſe them with thoſe common enigma's of magnetism &c.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is leaſt occaſion for poſing of children. Locke on Education.

2. To appoſe; to interrogate.

She in the preſence of others poſed him and ſifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon's Henry VII.

PO'SER. n. ſ. [from poſe.] One that aſketh queſtions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that queſtioneth much, ſhall learn much; but let his queſtions not be troubleſome, for that is fit for a poſer. Bacon.

POSITED. adj. [poſitus, Lat. It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that ſets on work theſe organs is nothing elſe but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus poſited or diſpoſed, is moſt apparently falſe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

POSI'TION n. ſ. [poſition, Fr. poſitio, Latin.]

1. State of being placed, ſituation.

Iron having ſtood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former poſition. Bacon.

They are the happieſt regions for fruits, by the excellence of ſoil, the poſition of mountains, and the frequency of ſtreams. Temple.

Since no one ſees all, and we have different proſpects of the ſame thing, according to our different poſitions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that eſcaped him.

By varying the poſition of my eye, and ſo bringing it nearer or farther from the direct beam of the ſun's light, the ſpot of the ſun's reflected light conſtantly varied upon the ſpeculum as it fell upon my eye. Newton's Opticks.

We have a different proſpect of the ſame thing, according to the different poſition of our underſtandings toward it. Watts.

Place ourſelves in ſuch a poſition toward the object, or place the object in ſuch a poſition toward our eye, as may give us the cleareſt repreſentation of it; for a different poſition greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts's Logick.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or ſin therein committed againſt God, with what conſcience can ye accuſe us, when your own poſitions are, that the things we obſerve ſhould every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thouſand lives. Hooker.

Let not the proof of any poſitions depend on the poſitions that follow, but always on thoſe which go before. Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious relation is to conclude from the poſition of the antecedent unto the poſition of the conſequent, or the remotion of the conſequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. In

4. [In grammar] The ſtate of a vowel placed before two conſonants, as penſpous, or a double conſonant, as axis.

POSITIONAL adj. [from poſition.] Reſpecting poſition.

The leaves of catapuſia or ſpurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives ſhall do preach, is a ſtrange conceit, aſcribing unto plants poſitional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

POSITIVE. adj. [poſitivus, Lat. poſitif, Fr.]

1. Not negative, capable of being affirmed; real, abſolute.

The power or bloſſom is a poſitive good, although the removal of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

Hardneſs carries ſomewhat more of poſitive in it than impenetrability, which is negative, and is perhaps more a conſequence of ſolidity, than ſolidity itſelf. Locke.

Whatſoever doth or can exiſt, or be conſidered as one thing, is poſitive, and ſo not only ſimple ideas and ſubſtances, but modes alſo are poſitive beings, though the parts, of which they conſiſt, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Abſolute, particular; direct, not implied

As for poſitive words, that he would not bear arms againſt king Edward's ſon; though the words ſeem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3 Dogmatical, ready to lay down notions with confidence; ſtubborn in opinion.

I am ſometimes doubting, when I might be poſitive, and ſometimes confident out of ſeaſon. Rymer.

Some poſitive perſiſting ſops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always ſo;
But you, with pleaſure own your errors paſt,
And make each day a critick on the laſt. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth univerſally, that which is poſitive, not ſo. Hooker.

Although no laws but poſitive [illegible], yet all are not mutable which be poſitive, [illegible] or elſe changeable, according as the matter [illegible] ing which they were made. Hooker.

Laws are but poſitive; love's pow'r we ſee,
Is nature's ſanction, and her firſt decree. Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to conſent to the enacting of ſuch a law, which has no view beſides the general good, unleſs another law ſhall at the ſame time paſs, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a poſitive voice, as well as a negative. Swift.

6. Certain, aſſured Ainſworth.

POSITIVELY. adv. [from poſitive.]

1. Abſolutely; by way of direct poſition.

Give me ſome breath, ſome little pauſe,
Before I poſitively ſpeak in this. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be eſteemed good or evil comparatively, and not poſitively or ſimply. Bacon.

2. Not negatively.

It is impoſſible that any ſucceſſive duration ſhould be actually and poſitively infinite, or have infinite ſucceſſions already gone and paſt. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Certainly, without dubitation.

It was abſolutely certain, that this part was poſitively yours, and could not poſſibly be written by any other. Dryden.

4. Peremptorily; in ſtrong terms.

I would aſk any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not poſitively require humility and meekneſs to all men. Sprat.

POSITIVENESS. n. ſ. [from poſitive]

1 Actualneſs; not mere negation.

The poſitiveneſs of ſins of commiſſion lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too, whereas the poſitiveneſs of ſins of omiſſion is in the habitude of the will only. Norris.

2. Peremptorineſs; confidence.

This peremptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion and ſpeculation, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact; in the one we impoſe upon men's underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

POSITIVITY. n. ſ. [from poſitive.] Peremptorineſs, confidence. A low word.

Courage and poſitivity are never more neceſſary than on ſuch an occaſion, but it is good to join ſome argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be ſtrongly pronounced too. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

POSITURE. n. ſ. [poſitura, Lat] The manner in which any thing is placed

Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and ſuppoſing all other things, which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramh.

[illegible] [from baſſinet, Fr. Skinner.] A little baſon, a porringer; a ſkillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of ſilver and tin in equal quantity, and alſo whether it yield no fineneſs more than ſilver, and again whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaſſing diſhes, poſnets and ſuch other ſilver veſſels. Bacon.

POSSE n. ſ. [Latin] An armed power, from poſſe comitatus, the power of the ſhires. A low word

The poſſe comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon.

As if the paſſion that rules, were the ſheriff of the place, and came with all the poſſe, the underſtanding is ſeized. Locke.

To POSSE'SS. v. a. [poſſeſſus, Lat. poſſeder, Fr.]

1. To have as an owner, to be maſter of, to enjoy or occupy actually

She will not let inſtructions enter
Where folly now poſſeſſes? Shakeſp. Cymbeline.
Record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies poſſeſs'd,
Unto his ſon. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

3 To give poſſeſſion or command of any thing, to make maſter of. It has of before that which is poſſeſſed; ſometimes anciently with.

Is he yet poſſeſſed [illegible]
How much you would?
—Ay, ay, three thouſand ducats. Shakeſp.
This man, whom hand to hand I ſlew in fight,
May be poſſeſſed with ſome ſtore of crowns [illegible]
This poſſeſſes us of the moſt valuable [illegible] of human life, friendſhip. [illegible] of the Tongue.
Seem I to thee ſufficiently poſſeſs'd
Of happineſs or not, who am alone
From all eternity? Milton's Par. Loſt, b.

I hope to poſſeſs chymiſts and corpuſcularians of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them. Boyle.

The intent of this fable is to poſſeſs us of a juſt ſenſe of the vanity of theſe craving appetites. L'Eſtrange.

Whole houſes, of their whole deſires poſſeſt,
Are often ruin'd at their own requeſt. Dryden.
Of fortune's favour long poſſeſs'd,
He was with one fair daughter only bleſs'd. Dryden.

We poſſeſſed ourſelves of the kingdom of Naples, the dutch [illegible] Engliſh
Endowed with the greateſt perfections of nature; and poſſeſſed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happineſs. Prior.

4. To fill with ſomething fixed

It is of unſpeakable advantage to poſſeſs our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words and actions at ſome laudable end. Addiſon

Thoſe, under the great officers, know every little caſe that is before the great man, and if they are poſſeſſed with honeſt minds, will conſider poverty as a recommendation. Addiſ.

5. To have power over, as an unclean ſpirit

Beware what ſpirit rages in your breaſt;
For ten inſpir'd, ten thouſand are poſſeſt. Roſcommon.
Inſpir'd within, and yet poſſeſs'd without. Cleaveland
I think, that the man is poſſeſſed. Swift.

6. To affect by inteſtine power

He's poſſeſt with greatneſs,
And ſpeaks not to himſelf, but with a pride
That quarrels at ſelf-breath. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſ.
Let not your ears deſpiſe my tongue,
Which ſhall poſſeſs them with the heavieſt ſound
That ever yet they heard. Shakeſp.
Poſſeſt with rumours full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear. Shakeſp.
What fury, O ſon,
Poſſeſſes thee, to bend that mortal dart
Againſt thy father's head? Milton's Par. Loſt, b. u.
With the rage of all their race poſſeſt,
Stung to the ſoul the brothers ſtart from reſt. Pope.

POSSE'SSION. n. ſ. [poſſeſſion, Fr poſſeſſio, Lat.]

1. The ſtate of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He ſhall inherit her, and his generation ſhall hold her in poſſeſſion. Eccluſ. xv 16.

In poſſeſſion ſuch, not only of right,
I call you. Milton.

2. The thing poſſeſſed.

Do nothing to loſe the beſt poſſeſſion of life, that of honour and truth Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and poſſeſſions. Locke.

To POSSE'SSION. v. a. To inveſt with property. Obſolete

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred poſſeſſeth and poſſeſſioneth. Careu.

POSSE'SSIONER. n. ſ. [from poſſeſſion] Maſter, one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were peaſe, whom having been of old freemen and poſſeſſioners, the Lacedemonians had conquered. Sidney.

Possessive adj. [Possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.

Possessory, adj. [possessoire, Fr. from possess.] Having possession.

This he dreams from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof. Howel.

Posse'ssour n. f. [possessor, Lat. possesseur, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell,
Receive thy new possessor. Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possessor of them. Stilling fleet.

'Twas the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury's Sermons.

Po'sset. n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Suck.

In came the bridemaids with the posset,
The bridegroom eat in spight. Suckling.

I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale and pearl julep. Wiseman's Surgery.

A sparing diet did her health assure;
Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure. Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which althea roots are boiled. Floyer on the Humours.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink. Arbuthnot.

To Po'sset. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle as milk with acids. Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Possibi'lity. n. f. [possibilité, Fr.] The power of being in any manner, the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need so requireth, the state of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities,
And do not break into these woeful extremes. Shakesp.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South's Sermons.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.

According to the multifariousness of this unitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers's Sermons.

Po'ssible. adj. [possible, Fr. possibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Whatever spirit careless of his charge
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope.

Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Dionied encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope.

5. Place, employment, office.

Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so. L'Estrange.

False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men unto a post that requires resolution. L'Estrange.

Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp, for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, is no more fit to command than a tempest. Collier.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's public posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys. Addison.

Certain laws, by sufferers thought unjust,
Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope.

Many thousands there are, who determine the justice or madness of national administrations, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper post of the house. Ex. xii. 7.

Fir-trees, cypresses and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fittest for posts or pillars. Wotton's Architecture.

Post is equivocal; it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger. Watts's Logick.

To Post. v. n. [poster, Fr. from the noun.] To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shakesp.

Will you presently take horse with him,
And with all speed post with him tow'rds the North? Shak.

Post speedily to my lord, your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets. Shakesp.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;
Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Knolles.

Themistocles made Xerxes post apace out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships athwart the Hellespont. Bacon's Essays.

Wer't thou of the golden-winged host,
Who having clad thyself in human weed,
To earth from thy prefixed seat did'st post. Milton.

Thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day;
At other times we reign by night alone,
And posting through the skies pursue the moon. Dryden.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into discredit, I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis. Walsh.

This only object of my real care,
In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd
From wealth, from pow'r, from love and from the world.
Prior.

To Post. v. a.

1. To fix opprobriously on posts.

I tell him, we ſhall ſtay here at the leaſt a month; and he heartily prays, ſome occaſion may detain us longer. Shakeſp.
Is any ſick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. Jam. v. 14.
Unſkilful with what words to pray, let me
Interpret for him. Milton.
He that prays, deſpairs not; but ſad is the condition of him that cannot pray; happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
Thou, Turnus, ſhalt attone it by thy fate,
And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late. Dryden.
He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my ſucceſs;
He was ſo true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.
Should you pray to God for a recovery, how raſh would it be to accuſe God of not hearing your prayers, becauſe you found your diſeaſe ſtill to continue. Wake.
2. To entreat; to aſk ſubmiſſively.
You ſhall find
A conqu'ror that will pray in aid for kindneſs,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakeſpeare.
Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
The name of great Anchiſes may be known. Dryden.
3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me is a ſlightly ceremonious form of introducing a queſtion.
But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? Bent ley's Sermons.
4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.
Barnard in ſpirit, ſenſe and truth abounds;
Pray then what wants he? fourſcore thouſand pounds. Pope

To PRAY. v. a.
1. To ſupplicate; to implore; to addreſs with ſubmiſſive petitions.
How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.
2. To aſk for as a ſuppliant.
He that will have the benefit of this act, muſt pray a prohibition before a ſentence in the eccleſiaſtical court. Ayliffe.
3. To entreat in ceremony or form.
Pray my colegue Antonius I may ſpeak with him,
And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him with the tribunes to come to me. B. Jonſ.

PRAYER. n. ſ. [priere, Fr.]
1. Petition to heaven.
They did ſay their prayers, and addreſs'd them
Again to ſleep. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

As he is fam'd for mildneſs, peace and prayer. Shakeſp.
My heart's deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved Romans x. 1.
Sighs now breath'd
Inutterable, which the ſpirit of prayer
Inſpir'd. Milton.
No man can always have the ſame ſpiritual pleaſure in his prayers; for the greateſt ſaints have ſometimes ſuffered the baniſhment of the heart, ſometimes are fervent, ſometimes they feel a barrenneſs of devotion; for this ſpirit comes and goes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
2. Entreaty; ſubmiſſive importunity
Prayer among men is ſuppoſed a means to change the perſon to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stillingfleet.

PRAYERBOOK. n. ſ. [prayer and book] Book of publick or private devotions.
Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And ſtand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy deſcant. Shakeſp.
I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.

PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [prædico, Lat. preſcher, Fr.] To pronounce a publick diſcourſe upon ſacred ſubjects.
From that time Jeſus began to preach. Mat. iv. 17.
Prophets preach of thee at Jeruſalem. Neh. vi 7.
Divinity would not paſs the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an eaſier ſupplementary trade, by thoſe that diſliked the pains of their own. D. of Pie.
As he was ſent by his father, ſo were the apoſtles commiſſionated by him to preach to the gentile world. D. of Piety.
The ſhape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To PREACH. v. a.
1. To proclaim or publiſh in religious orations.
The Jews of Theſſalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.
2. To inculcate publickly, to teach with earneſtneſs.
There is not any thing publickly notified, but we may properly ſay it is preached. Hooker.
He oft to them preach'd
Converſion and repentance. Milton.
Can they preach up equality of birth,
And tell us how we all began from earth. Dryden.
Huge heaps of ſlain,
Among the reſt, the rich Galeſus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidſt the maſſes of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. ſ. [preſche, Fr. from the verb.] A diſcourſe; a religious oration.
This overſight occaſioned the French ſpitefully to term religion in that ſort exerciſed, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREA'CHER. n. f. [prescheur, Fr. from preach.]

1. One who discourses publickly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psalm lxviii. 11

You may hear the sound of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honest man,
One of those few that in this town
Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crashaw.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift

PREA'CHMENT. n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt or ridicule.

Was't you, that reveil'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent. Shakesp.
All this is but a preachment upon the text at last.
L'Estrange.

PREAMBLE. n. f. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way ease with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer. Hooker, b.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainsayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, ad preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.

With preamble sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.
I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.

PREA'MBULARY. } adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in PREA'MBULOUS. } use.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHE'NSION. n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PREASE. n. f. Press; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PREA'SING. part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PRE'BEND. n. f. [præbenda, low Latin, prebende, Fr.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of council with the bishop. Bacon.

PRE'BENDARY. n. f. [præbendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubberd.

I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift's Last Will.

PRECA'RIOUS adj. [precarius, Lat. precaire, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another, held by courtesy, chargeable or amenable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unfaithfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard,
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

Our little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison's Spectator.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermons.

PRECA'RIOUSLY. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainly; dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song.

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,

PRECA'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter, render the operation but little adviseable. Sharp's Surgery.

PRECAU'TION. n. f. precaution, Fr. [from præcautus, Lat.] Preservative caution, preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his failing with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the State of the War.

To PRECAU'TION v. a. [precautionner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRECEDANEOUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, made by the author for præcedaneus, præcidaneus, Lat. cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be [illegible] precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to [illegible] productions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To PRECE'DE. v. a. [præcedo, Lat. preceder, Fr.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm;
But harm precedes not sin. Milton.
Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
To what the centuries preceding spoke: Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECEDENCE. }
PRECE'DENCY. } n. f. [from præcedo, Lat.]

1. The act or state of going before; priority.
2. Something going before; something past.

I do not like but yet, it does allay
The good precedence. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been sain. Shake.

3. Adjustment of place.

The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is smallest
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. Milton's Par. Lost.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howel.

That person hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd,
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action. Locke.

PRECE'DENT. adj. [precedent, Fr præcedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurposed. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notorious, wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRE'CEDENT. n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,
The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakespeare.

A reason

A reason mighty, strong and effectual,
A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
For me, most wretched, to perform the like.
No power in Venice
Can alter a decree established
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an errour, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of [illegible] towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealing with the people of Israel. Tillotson's Sermons.
Such precedents are numberless; we draw

PRE'CEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRE'CENTOR. n. s. [precentor, Lat. precenteur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, [illegible] he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hamm.

PRE'CEPT. n. s. [precepte, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given, a mandate, a commandment, a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God Hooker

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECE'PTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use.

Men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptial medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm ach with air, and agony with words Shakesp.

PRECE'PTIVE adj. [preceptivus, Lat. from precept.] Containing precepts, giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECE'PTOR. n. s. [præceptor, Lat precepteur, Fr.] A teacher, a tutor

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will [illegible] Locke

It was to thee, great Stagyrite unknown,
[illegible] tay preceptor of divine renown Blackmore.

PRE'CESS. n. s. [from præcedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.

PRE'CINCT. n. s. [præcinctus, Latin.] Outward limit, boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholick church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light,
Directly towards the new-created world. Milton.

PRECIO'SITY. n. s. [from pretiosus, Lat.]
1. Value; preciousness.
2. Any thing of high price.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciosities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Romans seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their [illegible]ation of these preciosities. More's Divine Dialogues.

PRE'CIOUS. adj. [precieux, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]
1. Valuable; being of great worth

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected only because the value of them lieth hid Hooker.

I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking? Shakesp. Macbeth.

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor luck Shakesp. Cymbeline.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Addison's Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let [illegible]
That riches grow in hell, that soil may best
Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

More of the same kind, concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della valle. Locke.

PRE'CIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]
1. Valuably; to a great price.
2. Contemptuously. In irony.

PRE'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRE'CIPICE. n. s. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep, a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice, for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

Ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies
Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His gen'rous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE } n. s. [from precipitant.] Rash haste, head
PRECIPITANCY. } long hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitances should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glanvill.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glanvill's Scepsis.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Gulliver's Travels.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and haltiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts's Logick.

PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge, antecedent examination.

PRECONCEIT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of sagacity or care, defective. Government of the Tongue.

The reason why men are so weak in governing us, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South's Sermons.

PRECONCEPTION n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract. This was formerly accented on the last syllable.] A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract,
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakesp.

To PRECONTRA'CT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSE n. f. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like precurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shakespeare.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. precurseur, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the precursors
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakesp. Tempest.

His ruff crest he rears,
And pricks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINA'TION. n. f. [predestination, Fr. from predestinate] Fatal decree, pre-ordination.

Predestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and predestination is only of men; and yet not of all men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Par. Lost, b.

PREDESTINA'TOR. n. f. [from predestinate] One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To PREDESTINE. v. a. [præ and destine.] To decree beforehand

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret power this restless ball,
And bid predestin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINA'TION. n. f [predetermination, Fr. præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely, 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To PREDETE'RMINE. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life Hale.

Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJU'DICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice, formed before examination.

This rule of caſting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not propoſed to any of us to be practiſed at once as ſubjects or chriſtians, but merely as philoſophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepoſſeſſed.

Their works will be embraced by moſt that underſtand them, and their reaſons enforce belief from [illegible] readers. Brown's Vulgar

PREJUDICA'TION. n. ſ. [from prejudicate.] The act of judging beforehand.

PRE'JUDICE. n. ſ. [prejudice, Fr. prejudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepoſſeſſion; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is uſed for prepoſſeſſion in favour of any thing or againſt it. It is ſometimes uſed with to before that which the prejudice is againſt, but not properly

The king himſelf frequently conſidered more the perſon who ſpoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counſel itſelf that was given. Clarendon, b. vi.

My comfort is, that their manifeſt prejudice to my cauſe will render their judgment of leſs authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reaſon, when I talk of practiſing to fly, [illegible] an owl for my pains. Addiſon

2. [illegible] hurt; injury. This ſenſe is only accidental or conſequential, a bad thing being called a prejudice, only becauſe prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word it were therefore better to uſe it leſs; perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any miſchief, which does not imply ſome partiality or prepoſſeſſion. In ſome of the following examples its impropriety will be diſcovered

I have

I have not ſpake one the leaſt word,
That might be prejudice of her preſent ſtate,
Or touch of her good perſon. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice, for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

[illegible]
Nor bribes your eyes to prejudice your heads. Anonym.

2. To obſtruct or injure by prejudices previouſly raiſed.

Companies of learned men, be they never ſo great and reverend, are to yield unto reaſon; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the ſimplicity of his perſon, which doth alledge it. Hooker, b. ii. ſ. 7.

Neither muſt his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgifte.

I am not to prejudice the cauſe of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure, to hurt; to diminiſh, to impair; to be detrimental to. This ſenſe, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original ſenſe; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The ſtrength of that law is ſuch, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the ſame by any their ſeveral laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private reſolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube reſcu'd, and the empire ſav'd,
Say, is the majeſty of verſe retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy ſofter vein,
To ſing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the compoſition of its ingredients than the watry infuſion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of ſo grateful a flavour, the only care required in this compoſition was to chuſe ſuch an addition as might not prejudice it. London Diſpenſatory.

PREJUDI'CIAL. adj. [prejudiciable, Fr. from prejudice.]

1. Obſtructive by means of oppoſite prepoſſeſſions.

2. Contrary; oppoſite.

PREPO'NDERANCE. } n. f. [from preponderate.] The state of PREPO'NDERANCY. } outweighing; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them into blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fish remora fastening, might make it stag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew's Museum.

To PREPO'NDERATE. v. n. [præpondero, Lat.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes. Glanvill.

The trivialest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

To PREPO'NDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding increase of new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter. Locke.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be placed and fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us. Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance, we must form a judgment which side preponderates. Watts.

PREPONDERA'TION. n. f. [from preponderate.] The act or state of outweighing any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons. Watts's Logick.

PREPOSSE'SSION. n. f. [from prepossess.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to pretend to him, and so to engage him in holiness first and then in bliss. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not so much wondred at. South's Sermons.

With thoughts, from prepossession free, reflect
[illegible]

PREPO'STEROUS. adj. [præposterus, Lat.]

1. Having that first which ought to be last; wrong; absurd; perverted.

Put a case of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women: is not such a preposterous government against the first order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itself void? Bacon.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I first
Receiv'd a being! 'tis a preposterous gift,
An act at which inverted nature starts,
And blushes to behold herself so cruel. Denham.

Such is the world's preposterous fate;
Amongst all creatures, mortal hate
Love, though immortal, doth create. Denham.

By this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies, quite contrary to the preposterous reasonings of those men, who expected so different [illegible]t. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To-night we hold a ſolemn ſupper,
And I'll requeſt your preſence. Shakeſp.

The preſence of a king engenders love
Amongſt his ſubjects and his loyal friends,
As it diſanimates his enemies. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

2. Approach face to face to a great perſonage.

The ſhepherd Dorus anſwered with ſuch a trembling voice and abaſhed countenance, and oftentimes ſo far from the matter, that it was ſome ſport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him ſo diſcountenanced with unwonted preſence. Sidney, b. i.

Men that very preſence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear! Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a ſuperior.

Thou know'ſt the law of arms is ſuch,
That, whoſo draws a word in th' preſence 'tis death. Sha.
I know not by what power I am made bold,
In ſuch a preſence here, to plead my thoughts. Shakeſp.
Wiſdom thy ſiſter, and with her did'ſt play
In preſence of th' Almighty. Milton.
Perhaps I have not ſo well conſulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into ſuch a ſeeming preſence. Glanvill's Sceſ.

Since ranging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not awe'd by arms, but in the preſence bold,
Without reſpect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

God, to remove his ways from human ſenſe,
Plac'd heav'n from earth ſo far, that earthly ſight,
If it preſume, might err in things too high,
And no advantage gain. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.

6. It has on or upon ſometimes before the thing ſuppoſed, or cauſing preſumption.
He, that would not deceive himſelf, ought to build his hypotheſis on matter of fact, and not preſume on matter of fact, becauſe of his hypotheſis. Locke.
Luther preſumes upon the gift of continency. Atterbury.

7. It has of ſometimes, but not properly
Preſuming of his force, with ſparkling eyes,
Already he devours the promis'd prize. Dryden.

PRESU'MER. n. ſ. [from preſume.] One that preſuppoſes; an arrogant perſon.
Heavy with ſome high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwiſe great deſervers do grow intolerable preſumers. Wotton.

PRESU'MPTION. n. ſ. [præſumptus, Lat. preſomption, Fr.]
1. Suppoſition previouſly formed.

With any token of preſumptuous ſuit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deſerve him. Shakeſp.
The boldneſs of advocates prevail with judges; whereas they ſhould imitate God, who repreſſeth the preſumptuous, and giveth grace to the modeſt. Bacon's Eſſays.
Their minds ſomewhat rais'd
By falſe preſumptuous hope. Milton.
Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have ſo preſumptuous a thought, as to be wiſer than their neighbours. Locke.

2. Irreverent with reſpect to holy things
Thus I preſumptuous, and the viſion bright,
As with a ſmile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milton.
The pow'rs incens'd
Puniſh'd his preſumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprize ſhe dy'd. Dryden.
Can'ſt thou love
Preſumptuous Crete, that boaſts the tomb of Jove. Pope.

PRESU'MPTUOUSLY. adv. [from preſumptuous.]
1. Arrogantly; irreverently.
Do you, who ſtudy nature's works, decide,
Whilſt I the dark myſterious cauſe admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, preſumptuouſly enquire. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

2. With vain and groundleſs confidence in divine favour.
I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature perſuaſion of my being in Chriſt, and not ſuffer me to go on preſumptuouſly or deſperately in any courſe Hamm.

PRESU'MPTUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from preſumptuous] Quality of being preſumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRI'SAGE. n. s. [from prise.]

Prisage, now called butlerage, is a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark loaden with wine, containing less than forty tuns, two tuns of wine at his price.

PRISM. n. s. [prisme, Fr. πρίσμα.]

A prism of glass is a glass bounded with two equal and parallel triangular ends, and three plain and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end. Newton's Opticks.

Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds
Form frosting, on the sun, thy showery prism. Thomson.

PRISMA'TICK. adj. [prismatique, Fr. from prism.] Formed as a prism.

If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry. Denham.

False eloquence, like the prismatick glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on every place,
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay. Pope.

PRISMA'TICALLY. adv. [from prismatick.] In the form of a prism.

Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either tin, sulphur or mercury befals the glass, by being prismatically figured, and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.

PRISMOI'D. n. s. [πρίσμα and εἶδος.] A body approaching to the form of a prism.

PRISON. n. s. [prison, Fr.] A strong hold in which persons are confined; a gaol.

He hath commission
To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shakesp. King Lear.

I thought

For those rebellions here their prison ordain'd. Milton.

I thought our utmost good
Was in one word of freedom understood,
The fatal blessing came, from prison free,
I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily. Dryden.

Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
Set open to your slave the prison door. Dryden.

The tyrant Æolus,
With pow'r imperial, curbs the struggling winds,
And sounding tempests in dark prisons binds. Dryden.

He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is presently at liberty. Locke.

Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries. Shakesp.

Then did the king enlarge
The spleen he prison'd. Chapman's Iliads

PRI'SON-BARS. n. f. A kind of rural play, commonly called prison-base.

The sparables of the court play every friday at cuchoo di cover, which is no other than prisonbase upon horseback, hunting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands. Sandys's Travels.

PRI'SONER. n. f. [prisonnier, Fr.]

1. One who is confined in hold

Cesar's ill erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doomed a prisoner. Shakesp. Rich. II

The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and nastily kept. Bacon.

He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only to his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom. Decay of Piety.

A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would, and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.

2. A captive; one taken by the enemy

So oft as homeward I from her depart,
I go like one that having lost the field,
Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English. Bacon.

He yielded on my word,
And as my prisoner, I restore his sword. Dryden.

Those albeit I know he nothing so much hateth as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occasion him to put forth divers other goodly works. Spenser.

Those, to whom he entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had far different instructions. Decay of Piety.

It is certain laws, by virtue of any sanction they receive from the promulgated will of the legislature, reach not a stranger, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punish offences against it. Locke.

PROMULGATION. n. s. [promulgatio, Lat. from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The stream and current of this rule hath gone as far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the gospel. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South.

PROMULGATOR. n. s. [from promulgate.] Publisher, open teacher.

How groundless a calumny this is, appears from the sanctity of the christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; so also from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

To PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.

The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulged and propagated Atterbury.

PROMU'LGER. n. s. [from promulge.] Publisher; promulgator.

The promulgers of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Atterbury.

PRONA'TOR. n. s. In anatomy, a muscle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downwards. Dict.

PRONE. adj. [pronus, Latin.]

1. Bending downward, not erect.

- There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but indu'd
With sanctity of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene
Govern the rest. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

2. Lying with the face downwards, contrary to supine.

Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those postures, prone, supine and erect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. Precipitous, headlong; going downwards.

Down thither prone in flight
He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky
Sails between worlds. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

4. Declivous; sloping.

Since the floods demand,
For their descent, a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.

The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part slower to the one and prone to the other, than that duty, preserved them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. Hooker.

Those who are ready to confess him in judgment and profession, are very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South's Sermons.

If we are prone to sedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.

Still prone to change, though still the slaves of state. Pope.

PRO'NENESS. n. s. [from prone.]

1. The state of bending downwards, not erectness.

If erectness be taken, as it is largely opposed unto proneness, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their venters, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of question. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. The state of lying with the face downwards; not supineness.

3. Descent; declivity.

4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.

The holy spirit saw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteousness is the less accounted of, by reason of the proneness of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.

The sun being first from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall;
And this declining proneness unto nought,
Is ev'n that sin that we are born withal. Davies.

He instituted this way of worship, because of the carnality of their hearts, and their proneness of the people to idolatry Tillotson's Sermons.

The proneness of good men to commiserate want, in whatsoever shape it appears. Atterbury's Sermons.

How great is the proneness of our nature, to comply with this temptation. Rogers's Sermons.

PRONG. n. s. [pronghen, Dutch, to squeeze. Minsheu.] A fork.

The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys's Journey.

Whacum his sea-coal prong threw by,
And basely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.

Be mindful,
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move
The crusted earth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

PRO'NITY. n. s. [from prone.] Proneness. A word not used.

Of this mechanick pronity, I do not see any good tendency. More's Divine Dialogues.

PRONOU'N. n. s. [pronom, Fr. pronomen, Lat.]

I, thou, he, we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

To PRONOUNCE. v. a. [prononcer, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]

1. To speak, to utter.

He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jer. xxxvi. 18.

2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.

She
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

I have pronounced the word, saith the Lord. Jer. xxxiv. 5.

So was his will
Pronounc'd among the gods. Milton.

Sternly he pronounc'd the rigid interdiction. Milton.

The pronouncing of sentence of death is the office of inferior magistrates. Locke.

Absalom pronounced a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.

Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd. Milton.

Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Holder

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOU'NCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.

How confidently soever men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are then most pious, when they are most eager and unquiet; yet 'tis sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act surely. South's Sermons.

PRONOU'NCER. n. s. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in expences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

PRONUNCIA'TION. n. s. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. prononciation, Fr.] The act or mode of utterance.

The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out, that were serviceable for the purpose. Holder.

It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

PROOF. n. f. [from prove]

1. Evidence, teſtimony, conviction, argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always ſo teſtified, I ſee not how we ſhould poſſibly with a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof ſufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials ſhould be altered, yet the proof of every thing muſt needs be by the teſtimony of ſuch perſons as the parties ſhall produce. Spenſer.

That which I ſhall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof ſo high. Shakeſp.

One ſoul in both, whereof good proof
This day affords. Milton.

Thus, verſe on death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfil'd their common fates. Dryden

Thoſe intervening ideas, which ſerve to ſhew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Teſt, trial, experiment.

Hell-born! not to contend with ſpirits of heav'n. Milton.

Sampſon,
This day to Dagon is a ſolemn feaſt,
They ſtrength they know ſurpaſſing human race,
And now ſome publick proof thereof require
To honour this great feaſt. Milton's Agoniſtes.

When the imagination hath contrived the frame of ſuch an inſtrument, and conceives that the event muſt infallibly anſwer its hopes, yet then does it ſtrangely deceive us in the proof. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more,
Becauſe he ſhew'd, by proof, 'twas eaſy to be poor. Dryd

My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addiſon.

Here for ever muſt I ſtay,
Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.

3. Firm temper, impenetrability; the ſtate of being wrought and hardened, till the expected ſtrength is found by trial to be attained.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy bleſſings ſteel my lance's point. Shakeſp.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my ſabre, and of proof my arms;
I aſk no other bleſſing of my ſtars. Dryden.

With arms of proof, both for myſelf and thee,
Chuſe thou the beſt. Dryden.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Bellona's bridegroom, laſt in proof,
Confronted him. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

5. In printing, the rough draught of a ſheet when firſt pulled.

PROOF. adj. [This word, though uſed as an adjective, is only elliptically put for of proof.]

1. Impenetrable, able to reſiſt.

Now put your ſhields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than ſhields. Shakeſp.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, ſit thee, and confeſs have found thee
Proof againſt all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Par. Regain.

He paſt expreſſion lov'd,
Proof to diſdain, and not to be remov'd. Dryden.

When the mind is throughly tinctured, the man will be proof againſt all oppoſitions. Collier.

Guiltleſs of hate, and proof againſt deſire,
That all things weighs, and nothing can acquire. Dryden.

When a capuchin, that was thought proof againſt bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addiſon.

2. It has either to or againſt before the power to be reſiſted.

Imagin'd wife,
Conſtant, mature, proof againſt all aſſaults. Milton.

Deep in the ſnowy Alps, a lump of ice
By froſt was harden'd to a mighty price,
Proof to the ſun it now ſecurely lies,
And the warm dog-ſtar's hotteſt rage defies. Addiſon.

The God of day,
To make him proof againſt the burning ray,
[illegible]

PROOF'LESS. adj. [from proof] Unproved; wanting evidence.

Some were ſo manifeſtly weak and proofleſs, that he muſt be a very courteous adverſary, that can grant them. Boyle.

As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

3. To ſuſtain; to ſupport.

The nearer I find myſelf verging to [illegible] to be labour and ſorrow, the [illegible] few ſupports that are left me. Boyle.

PROP. [illegible] which any thing reſts.

The boy was the very ſtaff of my age, my very prop. Sha.

You take my houſe, when you do take the prop
That doth ſuſtain my houſe; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakeſp.

Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot ſupport themſelves. Bacon

That he might on many props repoſe,
He ſtrengths his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.

Again, if by the body's prop we ſtand,
If on the body's life, her life depend,
As Meleager's on the fatal brand,
The body's good the only wound amend. Davies.

Faireſt unſupported flower
From her beſt prop ſo far. Milton.

The current of his victories found no ſtop,
Till Cromwell came, his party's cheapeſt prop. Waller.

'Twas a conſiderable time before the great fragments that fell reſted in a firm poſture, for the props and ſtays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Burnet.

The props return
Into thy houſe, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryden.

PRO'PAGABLE. adj. [from propagate] Such as may be ſpread, ſuch as may be continued by ſucceſſion.

Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar ſeed, conſtitute a diſtinct propagable ſort of creatures. Boyle.

To PRO'PAGATE. v. a. [propago, Latin.]

1. To continue or ſpread by generation or ſucceſſive production.

All that I eat, or drink, or ſhall beget,
Is propagated curſe! Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x.

The Jews being under the œconomy of immediate revelation, might be ſuppoſed to have had a freer proſpect into that heaven, whence their law deſcended. Decay of Piety.

It is better to marry than to burn, ſays St. Paul; a little burning felt puſhes us more powerfully, than greater pleaſures in proſpect allure. Locke.

2. Place which affords an extended view.

Him God beholding from his proſpect high,
Wherein paſt, preſent, future he beholds,
Thus ſpake. Milton's Par. Loſt, b.

3. Series of objects open to the eye.

There is a very noble proſpect from this place: on the one [illegible] eye can reach: juſt oppoſite ſtands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other ſide the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addiſon.

4. Object of view.

Man to himſelf
Is a large proſpect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.

Preſent, ſad proſpect! I can be ought deſcry,
But what affects his melancholy eye,
The beauties of the ancient fabrick loſt
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coaſt. Prior.

5. View into futurity: oppoſed to retroſpect.

[illegible]
Stands not within the proſpect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

To him, who hath a proſpect of the different ſtate of perfect happineſs or miſery, that attends all men after this life, the meaſures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
